

TAKI MOORE · EMAIL ARCHIVE · YOUTUBE PLANNER

I Feel Sorry for the Normies

49 of the best emails, tagged by topic, estimated date and format, with a YouTube angle for each one.

49

EMAILS

8

SECTIONS

20

RATED ●●●● FOR YOUTUBE

20K

WORDS

Reading the tags

Every email has the same metadata block, followed by the full email. Start with the Top picks list, then use the Playlists page to group videos into series. Each email's YouTube block gives you a working title, a cold-open hook taken from the email itself, and a suggested video format.

Estimated date

- The archive doesn't store send dates, so every date here is inferred from clues in the email (e.g. "no sales team since Christmas 2024... 14 months ago" puts No. 07 around Feb 2026).
- High: a specific anchor in the text. Medium: a strong relative clue. Low: era and context only. —: evergreen, no clue.
- If you have the ESP export (ConvertKit, ActiveCampaign, etc.), swap in the real send dates.

YouTube potential ●●●●●

- 5: strong hook + real numbers or a story + a teachable idea. Make it a long-form video.
- 4: solid, maybe better as a mid-length video or inside a bigger video.
- 3: best as a Short or a vlog segment.
- 2: personal; check with family first.

Email format

- Story: personal, family, travel or comedy story → lesson.
- Case study: a client's or your own business's before → after, with numbers.
- Framework / Plan: a teachable model, maths or step-by-step.
- Philosophy: manifesto, contrarian take, metaphor.
- Update / Confession: behind the scenes, what changed and why.

Video formats used

- Story-led long-form: open cold on the story, reveal the lesson at the midpoint.
- Whiteboard / brown-paper explainer: your kraft-card frameworks on camera.
- Case-study breakdown: numbers on screen, ideally with the client.
- Short (≤60s): one moment, one line.

FORMAT MIX ACROSS THE 49

30 STORY	7 CASE STUDY	13 FRAMEWORK / PLAN	21 PHILOSOPHY / MANIFESTO
20 RATED 5/5	18 RATED 4/5	10 RATED 3/5	1 RATED 2/5

Emails can carry more than one format, so the format counts add up to more than 49.

All 49 emails

#	TITLE · BIG IDEA	SECTION	EST. DATE	FORMAT	TOPICS	YT
01	I'm pregnant. A dollar amount and a deadline beat waiting for someone to save you.	☐ First	Oct–Nov 2025 High	Origin story	Goals & deadlines, Money, Origin	● ● ● ● ●
02	Cage Match It's not scale vs lifestyle. It's design vs default. Not choosing is what kills you.	☐ First	2025–26 Low	Event recap / Case study (x2)	Business design, Scale vs lifestyle	● ● ● ● ●
03	'Less shame' Navigate by pride and shame, not just metrics. Shame gets you moving; pride stops you settling.	☐ First	2025–26 Medium	Philosophy / Confession	Decision-making, Standards, Salesless origin	● ● ● ● ●
04	I feel sorry for the normies Stop fixing weaknesses. Take a 7 or 8 strength up to an 11. That's where the money is.	☐ First	2024–25 Low	Manifesto / Self-deprecating story	Strengths, ADHD, Positioning	● ● ● ● ●
05	The unicorn funnel is dead. Funnels are built for unicorns. Real buyers move through a web. Design Cold → Warm → Hot invitations.	☐ Demand	2025–26 Low	Contrarian framework	Marketing, Funnels, Cold/Warm/Hot	● ● ● ● ●
06	Email is dead. If your list is dead, you killed it. Would you read your own emails?	☐ Demand	Jul–Aug 2026 Medium	Confession / Update	Email, Founder voice, Taking back control	● ● ● ● ●
07	Sales isn't your problem. This is: Sales problems are marketing problems handled downstream. Move persuasion upstream into content.	☐ Demand	-Feb 2026 High	Results update / Philosophy	Salesless, Founder-led marketing, Marketing vs sales	● ● ● ● ●
08	47 Minutes Time on brand, not time on list. Get new leads to 47 minutes of content fast. Bingers are buyers.	☐ Demand	2025 Low	Client case study / Data insight	Nurture, Bandwidth, Conversion speed	● ● ● ● ●
09	Fat Madison got 500 likes Scarcity makes you chase; demand lets you choose. Your problem isn't mindset. It's volume.	☐ Demand	2025–26 Low	Borrowed story + commentary	Demand, Scarcity, Pricing power	● ● ● ● ●
10	Find a window, and throw a brick through it Find the common advice (the window) and throw your better new way (the brick) through it.	☐ Demand	Late 2025 Medium	Philosophy / Framework (3 steps)	Contrarian positioning, Attention	● ● ● ● ●
11	We can tell 'AI writes all my stuff' isn't a flex. We can tell.	☐ Demand	2025–26 Low	Hot take	AI content, Authenticity	● ● ● ● ●
12	The sales call is the problem Sales calls aren't the answer; they're the friction. People hate being sold but love buying.	☐ Buying	2025–26 Medium	Sales letter / Plan (Doc → Deadline → Demand)	Salesless, Sales calls, Offer	● ● ● ● ●
13	Free webinars are a magnet for broke tire-kickers Swap free for paid, webinar for workshop. $100 filters out tire-kickers.	☐ Buying	2025 Low	Experiment/results / Plan	Paid workshops, Lead quality	● ● ● ● ●
14	I got mugged by a reggae CD salesman Clients who feel sold avoid you like a mugger. They go quiet and leave. Buyers stay.	☐ Buying	2025–26 Low	Personal story (comedy) / Lesson	Pressure selling, Retention, Buyer's remorse	● ● ● ● ●
15	The Silent Offer If your offer can't win a nod in total silence, it needs work. A good offer sells itself.	☐ Buying	Undated —	Thought experiment	Offer design	● ● ● ● ●

#	TITLE · BIG IDEA	SECTION	EST. DATE	FORMAT	TOPICS	YT
16	He made me beg (see pics) You lose sales you can't see because your process won't let people just buy.	Buying	Early 2026 High	Case study (screenshots)	Friction, Buying process, Salesless	●●●●●
17	The 50¢ sales fix People won't tell you the real reason they didn't buy. Find the missing Tic Tac.	Buying	Undated —	Personal story (comedy)	Sales hygiene, Hidden objections	●●●●●
18	Mid-Pitch Puberty 'Teach then sell' is broken because of the word 'then'. The best content teaches people what to want.	Buying	2025–26 Medium	Confession / Philosophy	Selling in content, Pitching, Workshops	●●●●●
19	Briefcase Pricing Your price is written in chalk, not stone. Prospects don't know what it's 'supposed' to be.	Money	Undated (story 2004) —	Throwback story / Philosophy	Pricing	●●●●●
20	Confessions of a pricing chicken Your confidence has nothing to do with your value. Price on client ROI and cost of inaction.	Money	Undated —	Confession / Framework (ROI/COI, 20x)	Pricing, Confidence	●●●●●
21	You're too small to be cheap You're too small to be cheap. The maths lands most coaches at a $2–5K offer.	Money	Undated —	Framework (maths) / Plan	Pricing, Offer design, Beginners	●●●●●
22	The $97,000 flight to Tokyo People pay whatever it takes to solve a bleeding-neck problem. Solve a $100K problem for $10K.	Money	2025 Low	Personal story (dramatic) / Lesson	Pricing, Bleeding-neck problems, Value	●●●●●
23	We sold all our furniture Don't decide what someone else's 'whatever it takes' is.	Money	Undated —	Borrowed story	Pricing, Projecting affordability	●●●●●
24	Spilling the beans Make the cup the lead magnet and sell the beans. Give information freely, charge for implementation.	Money	2025 Low	Field observation	Business model, Free vs premium	●●●●●
25	Great TV. Terrible business model Heroic saves make great TV and a terrible business model. Design the first 6 weeks.	Clients	2026 Low	Confession / Plan (Onramp)	Retention, Onboarding	●●●●●
26	David made me cry Churn starts at the beginning. Build a program so good people would feel stupid to leave.	Clients	2026 Low	Confession / Philosophy	Churn, Onboarding	●●●●●
27	I stole this from an airline Map the journey, find the Moments of Truth, T-bar each one. 6 of 9 happen in the first 6 weeks.	Clients	2026 Low	Borrowed case study (history) / Framework	Onboarding, Customer journey, Moments of Truth	●●●●●
28	Dan Martell gave us 4 months Ceiling = new clients per month ÷ monthly churn. The fastest way back to growth is fixing onboarding.	Clients	2026 Low	Case study (own business) / Framework (maths)	Churn ceiling, Growth, Onboarding	●●●●●
29	She took our phones Most businesses create Instagram Stories. Great ones create stories people retell.	Clients	2026 Low	Field observation / Plan	Client experience, Word of mouth	●●●●●
30	Take them Don't tell and point. Go with people.	Clients	Early 2026 Low	Micro-observation	Client experience, Coaching style	●●●●●
31	Homework is for losers Bad coaches give homework. Good coaches do the work live.	Clients	Undated —	Family story (comedy) / Philosophy	Delivery, Workshops, Do it live	●●●●●
32	Burning down a $1M business Adopt, then adapt. A business that doesn't fit you can be burned down and rebuilt bigger.	Team	2025–26 Low	Client case study	Simplification, Business model, Team size	●●●●●

#	TITLE · BIG IDEA	SECTION	EST. DATE	FORMAT	TOPICS	YT
33	Duct tape & scissors The secret to scale is scissors. Cut, don't add.	Team	2025-26 Low	Anonymised case / Philosophy / Own results	Complexity, Cutting, Scale	●●●●●
34	Founder v CEO You can hire a CEO; you can't hire a founder. Get back in the maker's seat.	Team	Undated —	Philosophy (short)	Founder role, Maker vs manager	●●●●●
35	The composer Violinist → conductor → composer. Build something that runs without you.	Team	2025 Low	Tribute / Event recap	Founder evolution, Leverage	●●●●●
36	Gizzards, regret, and why you need to walk out sooner Stop chewing the gizzards. You set the menu in your business.	Team	2024 Medium	Travel story (comedy) / Lesson	Tolerations, Cutting	●●●●●
37	This story gets worse every paragraph When execution gets cheap, bad judgment gets very expensive.	Team	Mid 2026 Medium	Personal story (escalating comedy) / Philosophy (AI era)	AI, Judgment, Team & hiring	●●●●●
38	A 2-screen company? Simplify to multiply. Build the company around the artist, not the mechanic's model.	Team	2024-25 Low	Confession / Update	Team size, Artist vs mechanic	●●●●●
39	Spanx your calendar Compress your calendar horizontally (days) and vertically (hours). Work against the clock.	Time	Undated —	Framework / how-to	Calendar, Time	●●●●●
40	1 week a month, Toni becomes insane Play two games: a compass you can follow forever, and a clock (a monthly campaign) that makes you move.	Time	~Jun 2026 Medium	Team story / Philosophy	Goals, Campaigns, Motivation	●●●●●
41	There's a chair in your face You're a lion frozen by too many chair legs. Remove the chair.	Time	Undated —	Metaphor	Focus, Overwhelm	●●●●●
42	The mornings are for thinking Mornings are for thinking, afternoons for working and hanging out. Half days double profit and triple fun.	Time	Undated —	Philosophy / How we run it	Day design, Events	●●●●●
43	Your 3 magics Build the business around your 3 magics. Dump, automate or delegate the Lesser Mortal Shit.	Time	~Feb 2024 High	Framework	Strengths, Delegation, LMS	●●●●●
44	How to be so productive it feels illegal Efficient ≠ productive. Show me the PRODUCT of your activity. Analog tools set you free.	Time	Undated —	Contrarian philosophy	Productivity, Analog tools, Maker vs manager	●●●●●
45	100 is plenty. Don't build the business you're supposed to want. Build the one you want.	Time	2025 Low	Manifesto (refrain)	Enough, Capping supply, Boardroom	●●●●●
46	The speed of freedom Everyone's driving as fast as they can. Know what you want; 92km/h is the speed of freedom.	Life	2024-25 Low	Family story / Philosophy	Design vs default, Lifestyle	●●●●●
47	Ethan's eyes The small self keeps us in a 2-metre world. You have to take the first step.	Life	~Mid-March (year unconfirmed) Medium	Vulnerable personal story	Fear, Resistance	●●●●●
48	That's ok. We're rich. Any problem money can solve isn't a problem. Don't do mindset voodoo. Make it true.	Life	Undated —	Anecdote / Philosophy	Money, Wealth mindset	●●●●●
49	Pianos and chemotherapy You can't fix every fire. Let some burn. Fix one thing so well it stays fixed.	Life	Mid 2026 Medium	Personal update / Philosophy	Priorities, Focus, Let fires burn	●●●●●

Top 16 picks for YouTube

Ranked by hook strength, hard numbers, how easy they are to show on camera, and how well they point to your offers (Salesless, Black Belt, Boardroom). Film 1-3 first. They have the widest appeal.

-
- 1 ■ NO. 37 · TEAM · MID 2026
My Assistant Accidentally Booked a $220,000 Hotel
HOOK "For about 2 hours, I thought my marriage might be over."
FORMAT Story-led long-form (highest viral potential in the archive)
PROOF $55K AUD/night Four Seasons penthouse; 32M KRW answer; no cancellation; Amex fraud block; ended up spending $6K.
NOTE Keep the assistant anonymous. Aim the lesson at the system, not the person.
-
- 2 ■ NO. 12 · BUYING · 2025-26
Sales Calls Are Killing Your Coaching Business
HOOK "2 no-shows, 1 reschedule, 1 unqualified, and 1 guy who needed to 'ask his wife!'"
FORMAT FLAGSHIP pillar video (15-20 min): the Salesless method end-to-end
PROOF 9 salespeople/9 sales → 0 salespeople/45 sales a month; Rodric $60K/yr → $130K/mo; 3-step method.
-
- 3 ■ NO. 07 · DEMAND · -FEB 2026
I Fired My Entire Sales Team. We Grew 5x.
HOOK "We haven't had a single salesperson since Christmas 2024, and we're never going back."
FORMAT Pillar long-form (12-15 min): the decision, the fear, the numbers
PROOF 9-person sales team removed; team 36 → 8.5; ads $60K → $6K/mo; 5x in a year; Black Belt sold out 8 months; 120 on Boardroom waitlist; Naval quote.
-
- 4 ■ NO. 14 · BUYING · 2025-26
I Got Scammed on Venice Beach (It Explains Why Your Clients Quit)
HOOK "You like reggae music?' Fatal mistake."
FORMAT Story-led video cut with Chandler's real footage. High-retention storytelling.
PROOF Chandler FILMED the whole thing. Photo of the 3 CDs. $60 Apple Pay shakedown. Hare Krishna flower trick.
-
- 5 ■ NO. 22 · MONEY · 2025
I Paid $97,000 for a One-Way Flight to Tokyo
HOOK "The doctor said if I flew, my lungs would collapse and I'd die. I had to be in Tokyo."
FORMAT Story-led long-form with photos; strong thumbnail
PROOF Land Rover crash + bruise photos; 4 broken ribs, punctured lung; $97K USD medevac flight; the 'Crazy Asian Road Trip'.
-
- 6 ■ NO. 19 · MONEY · UNDATED (STORY 2004)
I Secretly Raised My Boss's Prices 5x. He Never Knew.
HOOK "Every time he signed a client, I snuck in and changed the price."
FORMAT Story-led long-form or Short; very thumbnail-able PROOF Secretly added $250/mo to each agreement; $1K → $5K/mo; David never knew.

7

□ NO. 02 · FIRST · 2025-26

.....

$3M/Month Empire vs $5.8M Lifestyle Business: Which Should You Build?

HOOK

"One of them works 320 hours a year. The other sold to private equity."

FORMAT

Versus / debate: restage Jay vs Rob on camera, or a split-screen explainer

PROOF

Jay: $7K/mo → $3M/mo, 1,000+ clients, part-sold to PE. Rob: $5.8M/yr, 85% profit, team of 5, 320 hrs/yr, backyard golf course.

8

■ NO. 28 · CLIENTS · 2026

.....

The Churn Ceiling: The Math That Predicts When Your Business Flatlines

HOOK

"Dan Martell gave us 4 months. That was 5 years ago."

FORMAT

Whiteboard maths + story. Possible Dan Martell collab/mention.

PROOF

Churn-ceiling formula; 2 growth-curve cards ('I was here' / 'We are here'); $180K spent getting it right; 4x.

9

■ NO. 27 · CLIENTS · 2026

.....

I Stole This From an Airline, and It Fixed Our Churn

HOOK

"In 1981 a 39-year-old fixed an airline with 2 sheets of paper."

FORMAT

History story + brown-paper framework (10-12 min)

PROOF

SAS: $17M loss → $54M profit; Moments of Truth + T-bar cards; 45 clients onboarded in 2 hours.

10

■ NO. 32 · TEAM · 2025-26

.....

She Burned Down Her $1M Business. Now It Makes $2.4M.

HOOK

"She lied on her application to get in."

FORMAT

Case-study breakdown, ideally with a Steph interview

PROOF

Steph: $4K/mo → $1M in 12 months; 120 clients, 80 re-signed for 12 months; team 13 → 4; $2.4M FY; 20 hrs/wk.

NOTE

Get Steph's OK before naming her on YouTube.

11

□ NO. 01 · FIRST · OCT-NOV 2025

.....

I Was Broke With a Baby on the Way. One Number Saved Us.

HOOK

"A mate slipped me $200 so I could buy groceries. I got home and my wife said, 'I'm pregnant.'"

FORMAT

Story-led long-form (8-12 min) + 60s Short of the 'I'm pregnant' moment

PROOF

$60K/yr income, ~$30K left for a family of 5; $10K/month target; hit it weeks before Aroha was born; 17-year callback.

12

■ NO. 16 · BUYING · EARLY 2026

.....

I Tried to Give Him $10K. He Made Me Beg.

HOOK

"I asked for the price. Then the link. Then the link again."

FORMAT

Screen-share breakdown of the DM thread

PROOF

6 real DM screenshots; $9,995 purchase; 9 → 45 sales/mo ('36 lost sales a month'); a $30-60K sale every 16 hours.

NOTE

Blur the seller's identity in the screenshots.

13

■ NO. 39 · TIME · UNDATED

.....

Spanx Your Calendar: How I Work 16 Hours a Week

HOOK

"Sara Blakely made a billion dollars hiding ugly fat. Do the same to your calendar."

FORMAT

Tutorial / whiteboard walkthrough; very searchable

PROOF

Kraft before/after calendar grids; Taki works Tue-Fri, 8am-midday.

14 ■ NO. 21 · MONEY · UNDATED

You're Too Small to Be Cheap

•••••

HOOK "To make $100K you need 100,000 clients at $1... or 10 at $10K."

FORMAT Whiteboard maths explainer; great for newer coaches

PROOF Kraft-paper volume-vs-price log-scale diagram; $100K/yr breakdown.

15 ■ NO. 10 · DEMAND · LATE 2025

How to Get Attention in a Crowded Market: Throw a Brick

•••••

HOOK "How is Taki Moore getting thousands of views with only 15K subscribers? Here's the answer."

FORMAT Framework explainer; old-vs-new list makes great on-screen graphics

PROOF Peer quote on why Taki's YouTube works; 6 old-way vs new-way pairs; 3-step exercise.

16 ■ NO. 05 · DEMAND · 2025-26

The Funnel Is Dead. Build a Web Instead.

•••••

HOOK "Your funnel was designed for a customer who doesn't exist."

FORMAT Brown-paper whiteboard explainer (10 min)

PROOF Hand-drawn kraft card: FUNNEL (struck out) vs WEB; stage-by-stage asset list.

Suggested series

Grey text is each video's working title. Lead each playlist with its first video, since that one has the strongest hook.

Salesless: the flagship series

- 12 The sales call is the problem → Sales Calls Are Killing Your Coaching Business
 - 07 Sales isn't your problem. This is: → I Fired My Entire Sales Team. We Grew 5x.
 - 16 He made me beg (see pics) → I Tried to Give Him $10K. He Made Me Beg.
 - 14 I got mugged by a reggae CD salesman → I Got Scammed on Venice Beach (It Explains Why Your Clients Quit)
 - 18 Mid-Pitch Puberty → Why Your Pitch Feels So Awkward (Teach-Then-Sell Is Broken)
 - 13 Free webinars are a magnet for broke tire-kickers → Stop Running Free Webinars (Do This Instead)
 - 15 The Silent Offer → Would Your Offer Sell in Complete Silence?
 - 03 'Less shame' → Why I Refunded $38,000 Nobody Asked For
-

Pricing without fear

- 21 You're too small to be cheap → You're Too Small to Be Cheap
 - 19 Briefcase Pricing → I Secretly Raised My Boss's Prices 5x. He Never Knew.
 - 20 Confessions of a pricing chicken → Your Confidence Has Nothing to Do With Your Price
 - 22 The $97,000 flight to Tokyo → I Paid $97,000 for a One-Way Flight to Tokyo
 - 23 We sold all our furniture → They Sold Their Furniture to Pay Their Coach
-

Clients who stay (Onramp / churn)

- 28 Dan Martell gave us 4 months → The Churn Ceiling: The Math That Predicts When Your Business Flatlines
 - 27 I stole this from an airline → I Stole This From an Airline, and It Fixed Our Churn
 - 26 David made me cry → How Big Would Your Business Be If No One Ever Left?
 - 25 Great TV. Terrible business model → Heroic Saves Are Killing Your Coaching Business
 - 29 She took our phones → This Restaurant Took Our Phones (Steal This for Your Business)
 - 30 Take them → Don't Tell and Point
 - 31 Homework is for losers → Homework Is for Losers (Why Bad Coaches Give Homework)
-

Build it by design

- 02 Cage Match → $3M/Month Empire vs $5.8M Lifestyle Business: Which Should You Build?
 - 33 Duct tape & scissors → The Secret to Scale Is Scissors
 - 32 Burning down a $1M business → She Burned Down Her $1M Business. Now It Makes $2.4M.
 - 38 A 2-screen company? → How Did We Become a 2-Screen Company?
 - 45 100 is plenty. → Why I Capped My $5M Program at 100 Clients
 - 46 The speed of freedom → 92km/h Is the Speed of Freedom
 - 34 Founder v CEO → You Hired Yourself Into the Wrong Job
 - 35 The composer → Violinist, Conductor, Composer: The 3 Stages of a Founder
-

Strengths & time

- 04 I feel sorry for the normies → I Feel Sorry for the Normies (Stop Working on Your Weaknesses)
 - 43 Your 3 magics → Find Your 3 Magics (and Dump the Lesser Mortal Sh*t)
 - 39 Spanx your calendar → Spanx Your Calendar: How I Work 16 Hours a Week
 - 44 How to be so productive it feels illegal → I Run an 8-Figure Business and Spend 3% of My Week on a Laptop
 - 41 There's a chair in your face → Why You're Frozen (The Lion Tamer's Chair)
 - 42 The mornings are for thinking → The Calendar Mullet: Business in the Morning, Party in the Afternoon
 - 40 1 week a month, Toni becomes insane → The Compass and the Clock
-

Attention & demand

- 10 Find a window, and throw a brick through it → How to Get Attention in a Crowded Market: Throw a Brick
 - 05 The unicorn funnel is dead. → The Funnel Is Dead. Build a Web Instead.
 - 08 47 Minutes → The 47-Minute Rule: Why Bingers Become Buyers
 - 06 Email is dead. → Your Email List Isn't Dead. You Killed It.
 - 09 Fat Madison got 500 likes → Why You're Chasing Clients (A Dating-App Experiment Explains It)
 - 11 We can tell → 'AI Writes All My Content' Isn't the Flex You Think
-

PART 1

First

The character contract.

01 I'm pregnant.

02 Cage Match

03 'Less shame'

04 I feel sorry for the normies

I'm pregnant.

EST. DATE	Oct–Nov 2025 (High confidence) Aroha 'turns 17 next week'; born ~Oct/Nov 2008 ('10K a month by end of October... a few weeks before she arrives').
EMAIL FORMAT	Origin story
TOPICS	Goals & deadlines Money Origin
BIG IDEA	A dollar amount and a deadline beat waiting for someone to save you.
PROOF & ASSETS	$60K/yr income, ~$30K left for a family of 5; $10K/month target; hit it weeks before Aroha was born; 17-year callback.
YOUTUBE POTENTIAL
VIDEO FORMAT	Story-led long-form (8–12 min) + 60s Short of the 'I'm pregnant' moment
WORKING TITLE	I Was Broke With a Baby on the Way. One Number Saved Us.
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"A mate slipped me $200 so I could buy groceries. I got home and my wife said, 'I'm pregnant.'"

I can't even look him in the eye.

Head bowed, I admit it.

"Man, I'm working so hard, but we're broke. I don't even have enough money to get groceries on the way home."

Sam listens, and eventually it's time to go.

He shakes my hand and silently presses 2 crisp hundreds into my palm.

I take it, half grateful, half ashamed, and go to the supermarket.

I walk in the door and Kiri-Maree's there, eyes glossy.

"Honey, I've got some news."

Yay! I love news, I think.

"You might want to sit down."

Oh crap. I don't like sit-down news.

I sit on the edge of the bed. She stands in front of me.

She takes my hands, looks into my eyes, and softly says, "Taki, I'm pregnant."

My whole body floods with emotion, mostly dread.

I force a smile and give her a hug I mean but don't feel.

All I can say is "That's amazing"

We have a beautiful moment.

She leaves the room.

And I break.

WE ARE SO FED.

I can't even afford groceries, and now we're gonna have another kid?

I'm sweating. Hands shaking and sick to my stomach.

I spend the next 3 days paralysed. Terrified, claustrophobic.

I've gotta get outside and walk, just to breathe.

Then I start scribbling numbers on a scrap of paper.

I make $60,000 a year.

I lose some to tax.

I've been paying 20 grand to put my son through a fancy performing-arts school so he can chase his dream.

That leaves about 30 grand a year to keep a family of 5 alive.

Thirty. Thousand. Dollars.

A year.

We're so screwed.

Through the panic comes one small, stupid, hopeful thought:

If I can get to 10 grand a month before the baby's born, maybe we'll be okay.

And that hope becomes the mission.

No one's coming to save me.

For 3 days, I waited for a miracle, someone to show up with a plan and save me.

But no one's coming.

It's just me.

A pregnant wife.

3 kids who need their dad.

A fourth on the way.

And a ticking clock.

So I draw a line in the sand.

10 grand a month before the baby comes.

I don't know how.

I just know 2 things:

A DOLLAR AMOUNT AND A DEADLINE.

$10K a month. By the end of October.

I've got no map, no mentor, and no plan.

But I bust my ass for months. Early mornings, late nights, juggling 3 part-time jobs

AND WE JUUUUUST MAKE IT.

We hit $10,000 a month just a few weeks before my daughter Aroha arrives.

We can breathe again. We're gonna be alright.

That first $10,000 was a massive milestone.

It was the start of this incredible career, the freedom, and the life we've built since.

It's a tiny amount now, but it was huge.

10 grand a month got us out of survival and into stability.

That was 17 years ago.

And that little girl, Aroha, turns 17 next week.

Life gave me a dollar target and a deadline.

Sometimes I wish you had a deadline like that, something that would force you to stop waiting and finally break through.

I can't give you a baby (coz that'd be super weird).

You don't need a Deadline Baby.
You just need a deadline, baby.

TAKI 'HAPPY 17TH, AROHA' MOORE

Cage Match

EST. DATE	2025-26 (Low confidence) Recent event recap ('last month'); Jay's PE sale 'last year'.
EMAIL FORMAT	Event recap Case study (x2)
TOPICS	Business design Scale vs lifestyle
BIG IDEA	It's not scale vs lifestyle. It's design vs default. Not choosing is what kills you.
PROOF & ASSETS	Jay: $7K/mo → $3M/mo, 1,000+ clients, part-sold to PE. Rob: $5.8M/yr, 85% profit, team of 5, 320 hrs/yr, backyard golf course.
YOUTUBE POTENTIAL ●●●●●
VIDEO FORMAT	Versus / debate: restage Jay vs Rob on camera, or a split-screen explainer
WORKING TITLE	$3M/Month Empire vs $5.8M Lifestyle Business: Which Should You Build?
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"One of them works 320 hours a year. The other sold to private equity."

Last month, I stood between 2 coaching giants, ready to throw hands.

In the blue corner, fighting for Scale and Sale: Jay.

When he joined us, he was making $7k a month.

Today? $3M a month.

1000+ clients. Coaches, salespeople, marketers, ops wizards, the best curriculum builder I've ever met... and Jay.

He even sold a chunk of it to Private Equity last year.

Big. Serious. Grown-up empire stuff.

In the red corner, fighting for Lifestyle and Profit: Rob.

$5.8M a year.

85% profit.

Team of 5.

Worked 320 hours all last year.

Had so much free time, he built a world-class backyard golf course just to keep busy.

(I'M A MEMBER. FEE = GOOD BOTTLE OF RED.)

2 brilliant coaches.

2 completely different businesses.

For 45 minutes, they duked it out:

Why they built the way they built.

What they love about their model (and what they hate).

What they secretly envy about the other guy's game.

What mistakes they see others making when they chase either model blind.

It was electrifying.

You could hear a pin drop.

At first glance, it looked like the fight was about Empire vs Lifestyle.

Big vs Lean.

Scale vs Simplicity.

But after 45 minutes of jabs, uppercuts, and truth bombs, the real fight snapped into focus:

IT'S NOT ABOUT SCALE VS LIFESTYLE.

IT'S ABOUT DESIGN VS DEFAULT.

Jay and Rob chose what they wanted.

They built with intention.

And they're both winning, because they chose their own game and played it full out.

Meanwhile, most coaches are stuck tolerating businesses they secretly hate.

Not because they chose wrong, but because they never chose at all.

They didn't know what they really wanted.

So they followed guru after Instagram guru.

Getting pulled this way and that, chasing someone else's dream.

Until one day, they wake up trapped in a business they can't stand.

You've gotta choose: Build to sell, or build to live.

It's the not choosing that's killing you.

TAKI "CAGE MATCH REFEREE" MOORE

'Less shame'

EST. DATE	2025-26 (Medium confidence) Email shame '2 years ago'; Salesless '5x'd our business in the last 12 months'.
EMAIL FORMAT	Philosophy Confession
TOPICS	Decision-making Standards Salesless origin
BIG IDEA	Navigate by pride and shame, not just metrics. Shame gets you moving; pride stops you settling.
PROOF & ASSETS	Refunded $38K to 380 workshop attendees; $60K/mo ads + 9 salespeople yet flat; Simpsons 'Less shame?' clip.
YOUTUBE POTENTIAL ●●●●●
VIDEO FORMAT	Talking-head essay; the $38K refund works as a standalone Short
WORKING TITLE	Why I Refunded $38,000 Nobody Asked For
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"380 people paid. Nobody complained. I gave every dollar back the same day."

Everyone says you should base all your business decisions on data and metrics.

But the best decisions I've ever made have been made with the compass of Pride and Shame.

(MOSTLY SHAME).

It was Email Shame from reading the awful emails that went out under my name 2 years ago, that got me to take back my voice.

I've written you an email almost every day since then.

That sense of control then spread to Instagram, which led me to YouTube.

Which is now our #1 source of new clients.

It was Stagnant Revenue Shame. The frustration that despite spending $60k a month on ads, and 9 sales people hustling every day, we still weren't growing.

That shame led me to lock the entire sales team in a cupboard for 3 months (at full pay) to see if we really could sell high ticket coaching without sales people, and without calls.

I genuinely didn't know if it would work.

But I had to run the experiment to remove the shame.

We call it Salesless™, and it 5x'd our business in the last 12 months.

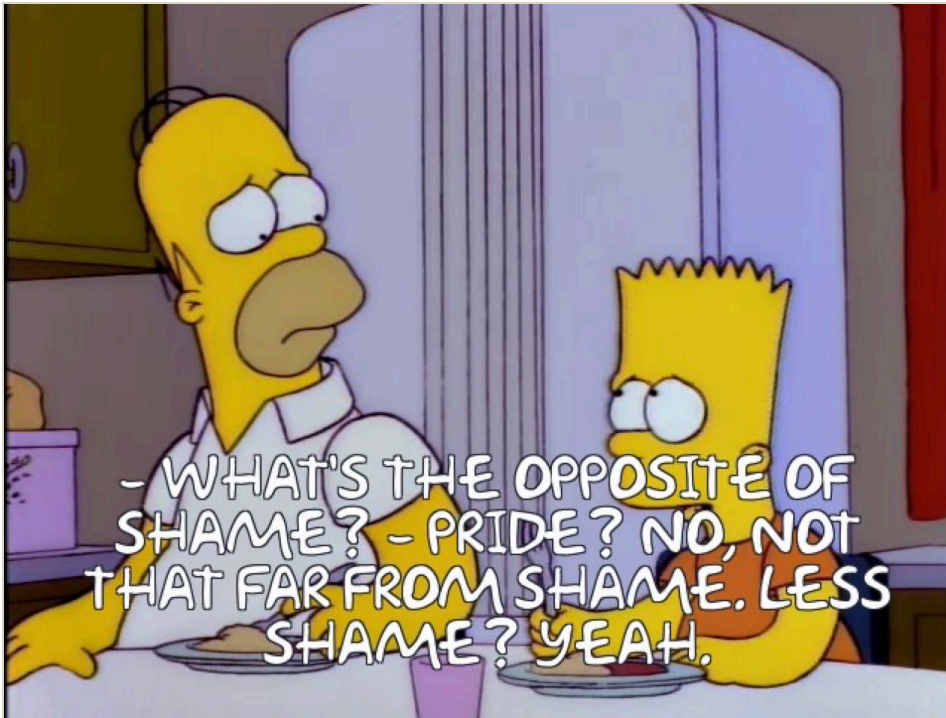

Plus, it's helped so many of our clients ditch sales calls and lame sales teams.

Shame is dangerous, but it's been good to us.

Those 2 shame-based decisions have created more change, more momentum, and more business growth than almost anything else in the last 15 years running this business.

Shame is a great motivator when you've been tolerating for too long.

Me and my brothers used to quote this clip from The Simpsons:

Bart: "Wow! My father an astronaut? I feel so full of... What's the opposite of shame?"

Marge: "Pride?"

Bart: "No... not that far from shame."

Homer: "Less shame?"

Bart: "Yeah."

If something's not good, sometimes 'less shame' is the right next goal.

But after a while, it's not enough.

Then comes Pride.

I want to make things I'm proud of. I want to look back at the end of a day, a week, an event and feel like I did good.

Mid last year, I ran a workshop that wasn't my best work.

380 people paid to attend. I made $38,000. People were happy.

But I wasn't.

I knew it wasn't my best work.

I wasn't ashamed of it. I just wasn't proud.

And I only want to be paid for work I'm proud of.

So even though no-one complained, we refunded all $38,000 the same day, with a little note that said:

"Today wasn't my best work. I only want to be paid for work I'm proud of. Please keep the training and all the bonuses, but I don't feel like I earned your money today. I'll do better next time."

Pride is the ultimate compass.

Shame gets you moving. And pride makes sure you don't settle.

Settling is the quickest way to become irrelevant. A ghost of potential wasted.

DATA AND METRICS ARE USEFUL, I NAVIGATE BY PRIDE AND SHAME.

Where do you have some business shame? What have you been tolerating too long?

What could you do with that project that would really make you proud?

Pick one, and do something about it next week.

Right now, I've got Website Shame, so it's on the list for next cycle.

If pride is too much of a stretch right now, listen to Bart and just go for 'less shame'.

TAKI 'LESS SHAME' MOORE

I feel sorry for the normies

EST. DATE	2024-25 (Low confidence) Evergreen; '650+ coaches hit $1M', '8-figure business'.
EMAIL FORMAT	Manifesto Self-deprecating story
TOPICS	Strengths ADHD Positioning
BIG IDEA	Stop fixing weaknesses. Take a 7 or 8 strength up to an 11. That's where the money is.
PROOF & ASSETS	Game character-point analogy; 3 conferences, same day, 3 continents; read-only calendar access.
YOUTUBE POTENTIAL
VIDEO FORMAT	Essay with character-builder graphics; calendar incident as a Short. Book-title video.
WORKING TITLE	I Feel Sorry for the Normies (Stop Working on Your Weaknesses)
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"My team banned me from my own calendar. I've got read-only access now. After the incident."

I feel sorry for the normies.

The ones who spread their points evenly.

In the games my son Ethan plays, you start by building a character.

You get 20 points to spend on qualities like Strength, Agility, Charisma, Stealth.

Spread them evenly and you're "balanced", but not good enough at anything to actually win.

You're the game equivalent of a mild-mannered accountant.

A safe loser.

Conventional advice to normies like that is to 'work on your weaknesses'.

Dumb.

Spend a whole year grinding your weaknesses and maybe you squeak it up to a 4 outta 10.

And no-one's gonna pay to watch you be a 4.

I'm ADHD as hell.

When Willy Wonka was handing out points before I was born, I wasn't really paying attention.

So I blew all my points on jazz hands.

VERY FUN, BUT I HAD NOTHING LEFT FOR NORMAL THINGS.

I'm basically dysfunctional.

I'm terrified of spreadsheets.

I spend 10 minutes a day looking for my keys.

I've quit more things than you've started.

I leave projects half-finished.

I book flights on the wrong days.

And my team banned me from my own calendar.

I've got read-only access now. After the incident.

What incident?

Years ago, I booked myself to speak at 3 conferences...

...on the same day.

...on 3 different continents.

It takes a special kind of moron.

And yet, I've built an 8-figure business by leaning into my jazz hands.

And I've helped 650+ coaches hit $1M a year.

And every one of those businesses looks unique, because the secret to fast growth is playing to your strengths.

Work on your weaknesses and the best you'll get is mediocre weaknesses.

But put that same energy into your strengths, and you can take a 7 or 8 all the way up to an 11.

And when you've got a skill sharpened to an 11... you own the world.

Forget your weaknesses.

YOUR NEXT MILLION DOLLARS WILL COME FROM LEANING INTO YOUR SUPERPOWER, NOT SANDING DOWN YOUR FLAWS.

TAKI 'READ-ONLY ACCESS' MOORE

PART 2

Demand

Leads every day.

05 The unicorn funnel is dead.

06 Email is dead.

07 Sales isn't your problem. This is:

08 47 Minutes

09 Fat Madison got 500 likes

10 Find a window, and throw a brick through it

11 We can tell

The unicorn funnel is dead.

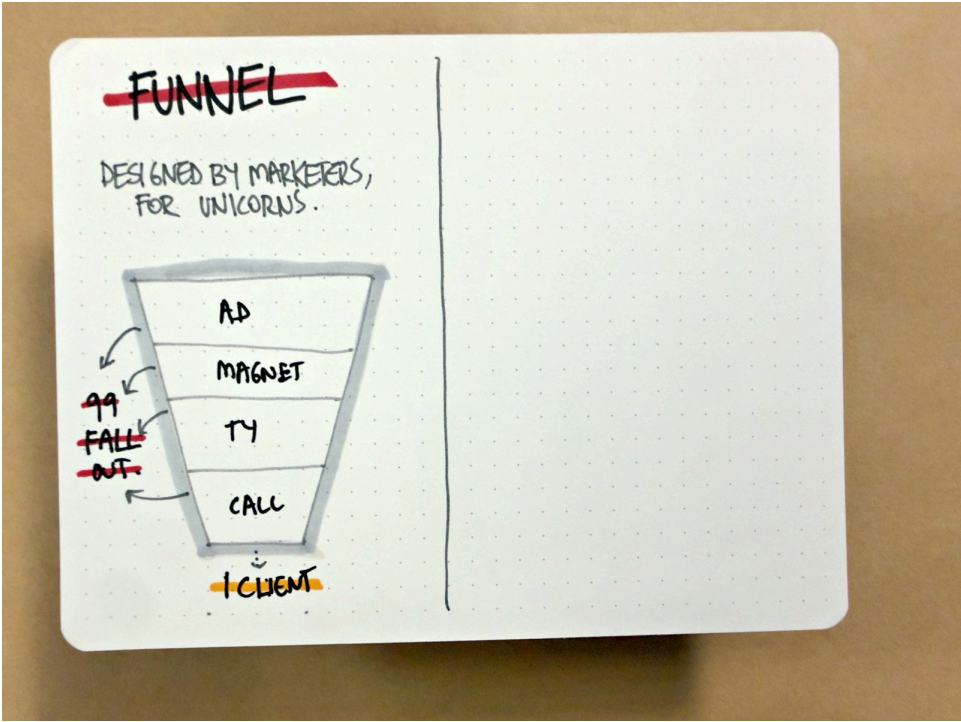

EST. DATE	2025-26 (Low confidence) Salesless-era language (offer doc → apply → buy).
EMAIL FORMAT	Contrarian framework
TOPICS	Marketing Funnels Cold/Warm/Hot
BIG IDEA	Funnels are built for unicorns. Real buyers move through a web. Design Cold → Warm → Hot invitations.
PROOF & ASSETS	Hand-drawn kraft card: FUNNEL (struck out) vs WEB; stage-by-stage asset list.
YOUTUBE POTENTIAL
VIDEO FORMAT	Brown-paper whiteboard explainer (10 min)
WORKING TITLE	The Funnel Is Dead. Build a Web Instead.
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"Your funnel was designed for a customer who doesn't exist."

Most marketers design their funnels for unicorns.

You know the perfect buyer, who:

- Notices your ad the first time they see you.
- Clicks straight away.
- Opts-in for your lead magnet.
- Books the call.
- Shows up, excited to learn more, with their credit card pre-opened.
- And buys.

Marketers draw them all neat & linear.

Cute in theory.

But it's not real life.

Unicorns are extinct. And so is the unicorn funnel.

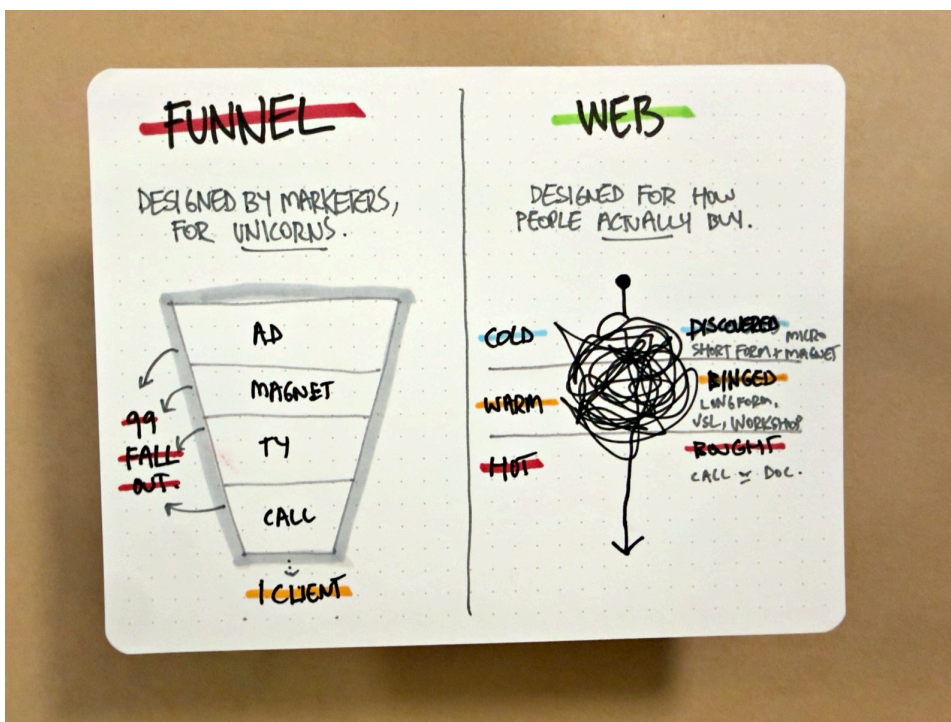

Funnels are neat, but your prospects are messy.

They don't move in a straight line.

Instead, they:

- find you on instagram late at night.
- Then fall asleep and forget you existed.
- See you again somewhere else, while scrolling on the toilet.
- Watch a bit. Maybe drop you a follow.
- Come back later.
- Then they binge you hard.
- And buy.

IT'S LESS LIKE A FUNNEL. AND MORE LIKE A WEB.

Most coaches market the way they want to sell. Not the way prospects actually buy.

So when we design marketing webs with our clients, we think in 3 stages:

Cold. Warm. Hot.

And each stage needs a different invitation.

Cold, sceptical leads don't know you yet.

So your job is simple: get discovered and earn the first easy yes.

In our world, that's best done with short form content and a micro magnet.

Dopamine hit & a quick win (Nothing to learn, and zero effort required).

Warm, curious prospects are interested, but not ready.

Now your job is to give them something worth binging.

That's where your Longform Show, Paid Workshops, and a Microwave VSL do the heavy lifting.

Hot primed buyers are ready.

They don't need more nurturing.

They just need an invitation. A clear way to buy.

That might be a sales call, if you still play that game.

Or, if you've gone Salesless™ & sell without calls like we do, it's an offer doc, then apply, then buy.

Prospects don't buy in straight lines, so don't try to force people down one.

Stop marketing the way you wish people bought.
Start marketing the way people actually buy.

TAKI 'FUNNELWEB' MOORE

Email is dead.

EST. DATE	Jul-Aug 2026 (Medium confidence) Written during Kiri-Maree's chemo (same season as #49).
EMAIL FORMAT	Confession Update
TOPICS	Email Founder voice Taking back control
BIG IDEA	If your list is dead, you killed it. Would you read your own emails?
PROOF & ASSETS	Ghost-written 'homeopathic' emails; chain reaction: email → IG → YouTube → Salesless; 36 → 8 team; 5x sales.
YOUTUBE POTENTIAL ●●●●●
VIDEO FORMAT	Talking-head story; one-question challenge format
WORKING TITLE	Your Email List Isn't Dead. You Killed It.
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"I realised I wouldn't read my own emails. That one admission changed everything."

Every week, i hear a coach tell me that email doesn't work, or their list is dead.

If your list is dead... You killed it.

(MURDERER) 🤖

Either you don't email much, or you only email when you want something.

What would you do if someone ignored you for ages, and you only heard from them when they wanted to sell you something?

You'd ignore them right back — and you'd have every right to.

I don't email when I want to sell you something.

I EMAIL SO YOU WANT TO BUY SOMETHING.

Big difference.

A couple of years ago, i had email shame.

We had a content team take the stuff I taught in Black Belt, transcribe it, and turn it into emails.

They were awful.

The only good thing was that no-one on the team was waiting for me to bang out another last-minute email.

But the emails were so bad, I can't even call it a good thing.

Because someone else made them from webinar transcripts,

They sorta said what I was trying to say,

sorta how I'd say it.

they were homeopathic: there was a tiny bit of me in them, but it was mostly BS.

And I asked myself a question:

Would I read my emails?

Of course I bloody wouldn't.

And that's the day I decided to take back my voice, and write to you.

Every weekday.

here on my iPad.

I had no idea at the time, but that tiny act gave me a taste of the power I'd given up in my business.

Email felt good. It started working.

So I took my newfound confidence and started on Instagram.

Then I looked at the other things in my business I'd been tolerating.

Bad marketing (my fault). Went all in on YouTube.

A sales process I didn't believe in. Let go of the sales team, and went Salesless™.

Leaned up a bloated team from 36 -> 8.

5X'd sales. Doubled the business. got my mojo back.

All coz I admitted I wouldn't read my own emails.

The message started out being about email. It's morphed into something bigger.

That's unprofessional, and i should edit it.

It's been a huge week: juggling kids, business and Kiri-Maree's chemo. I'm tired, and i kinda like just talking to you, so I'm gonna send it as is.

Let's land this plane:

If your email list is dead, you killed it.

If your business has lost its spark and you feel powerless, you're on the cusp of something insanely great.

I took back my power by asking the same question I'll ask you:

Would you read your emails?

If not, do something about it.

It changed everything for me.

TAKI 'BACK FROM THE DEAD' MOORE

Sales isn't your problem. This is:

EST. DATE	~Feb 2026 (High confidence) 'No sales team since Christmas 2024... about 14 months ago'.
EMAIL FORMAT	Results update	Philosophy
TOPICS	Salesless	Founder-led marketing	Marketing vs sales
BIG IDEA	Sales problems are marketing problems handled downstream. Move persuasion upstream into content.
PROOF & ASSETS	9-person sales team removed; team 36 → 8.5; ads $60K → $6K/mo; 5x in a year; Black Belt sold out 8 months; 120 on Boardroom waitlist; Naval quote.
YOUTUBE POTENTIAL			●●●●●
VIDEO FORMAT	Pillar long-form (12-15 min): the decision, the fear, the numbers
WORKING TITLE	I Fired My Entire Sales Team. We Grew 5x.
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"We haven't had a single salesperson since Christmas 2024, and we're never going back."

We haven't had anyone in sales since Christmas 2024.

And we're never going back.

About 14 months ago I made the decision to remove the sales team entirely.

At the time it felt terrifying, but I'd realised something uncomfortable.

Our sales problems weren't sales problems.

They were marketing problems, being dealt with downstream.

The sales team was compensating for my ineffective marketing.

Naval Ravikant once said:

"You're doing sales because you failed at marketing".

THAT WAS ME.

Marketing was weak, so we compensated with a 9-person sales team DMing, triaging, closing and following up.

Chasing.

Most big companies split marketing and sales into two different teams.

But they're really Siamese twins.

When things are good, nobody notices.

When things aren't, they point the finger.

Marketing says Sales isn't closing.

Sales complains that the leads suck.

They blame each other.

But they're actually 2 halves of the same pantomime donkey.

Marketing + Sales have one function:

Get clients.

Once I saw that, the solution became obvious.

Instead of trying to fix sales, we fixed the real problem.

We moved the persuasion upstream into marketing.

All the things our sales team used to do, the content now does.

Instead of persuading people in DMs, we persuade them in emails, videos and posts.

Instead of explaining the offer on sales calls, we explain it in the content.

Persuasion used to happen in our sales conversations.

Now it happens in the marketing.

And it happens at scale.

You're probably the best salesperson in your company.

Not because you're a great closer.

Because you understand the prospect and their problems better than anyone.

We don't need to replace that with sales people.

We just need to move that upstream, into the marketing.

Because founder-led marketing is sales at scale.

I've discovered that my perfect role is founder-led marketing.

It's probably yours, too.

Making things.

Sharing your point of view.

Talking to the market.

So I leaned into it.

First with email.

Then Instagram.

Then YouTube.

I'm happier than a pig in mud making and sharing things, and despite the fact that we've:

Gone from a team of 36 to 8.5

Slashed ad spend from $60k/month to $6k

We're 5x bigger today than we were a year ago.

Naval was right.

WHEN MARKETING WORKS, SALES PROBLEMS DISAPPEAR.

Good marketing makes sales easy.

Sometimes unnecessary.

It's why Black Belt has sold out for 8 months in a row.

And why there are 120 people on the waitlist for Boardroom.

Turns out persuasion scales a lot better through content than it does through a sales team.

After all, it takes one founder and a camera guy who pops over once a week.

Not a team of nine.

TAKI 'MARKETING > SALES' MOORE

47 Minutes

EST. DATE	2025 (Low confidence) 'Last year, I worked with... Sharran'.
EMAIL FORMAT	Client case study Data insight
TOPICS	Nurture Brandwidth Conversion speed
BIG IDEA	Time on brand, not time on list. Get new leads to 47 minutes of content fast. Bingers are buyers.
PROOF & ASSETS	Sharran's buyer study: every buyer consumed 47+ min; time-to-client halved.
YOUTUBE POTENTIAL ●●●●●
VIDEO FORMAT	Data explainer + Short ('the 47-minute rule')
WORKING TITLE	The 47-Minute Rule: Why Bingers Become Buyers
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"Every single buyer had one thing in common, and it wasn't how long they'd been on the list."

Getting new, cold leads to become clients fast is one of the hardest things for coaches to pull off.

Most coaches put new leads on an email list and hope that eventually, some will buy.

Hope. Eventually. Some. But not many. And not enough.

It sounds kinda lame when you put it like that.

Last year, I worked with a genius client Sharran who discovered something fascinating.

He got his team to study the people who BOUGHT his program, to see what they all had in common.

Some of the buyers had been on the list for months before buying, while others bought the same day they first opted in.

The one common thread that all the buyers had was they'd all consumed at least 47 minutes of his content before buying.

It wasn't the time on list that mattered. It was time on brand.

Not the weeks. The minutes.

So they began an experiment to see how quickly they could get new leads to consume 47 minutes of his stuff.

He re-wrote the new lead sequences with the 47 mins in mind.

A few minutes reading emails. Short and long-form videos. And the podcast. Each step, increasing time on Brand. What we call Brandwidth.

You wanna get people bingeing faster, because bingers are buyers.

When he immersed new leads in his world and his worldview, quickly:

Sales went up. Way up.

And the time from first contact to becoming a client was slashed in half.

Your number might be 47 mins, or it might be different, but the lesson here is simple:

THE SOONER YOU CAN GET THEM BINGEING, THE SOONER YOU CAN GET THEM BUYING.

TAKI '47 MINUTES' MOORE

Fat Madison got 500 likes

EST. DATE 2025-26 (Low confidence)

Curated viral dating-app story.

EMAIL FORMAT Borrowed story + commentaryTOPICS Demand Scarcity Pricing power

BIG IDEA Scarcity makes you chase; demand lets you choose. Your problem isn't mindset. It's volume.

PROOF & ASSETS Hinge experiment: 1,500+ likes in 24 hrs. Most of the email is someone else's words.

YOUTUBE POTENTIAL

VIDEO FORMAT Commentary/react segment. Retitle; credit the original creator.

WORKING TITLE Why You're Chasing Clients (A Dating-App Experiment Explains It)COLD-OPEN HOOK "A guy made a dating profile as a woman. What happened explains your sales pipeline."

HEADS-UP The email title isn't safe for a YouTube title/thumbnail. The story is borrowed, so credit it.

I read a crazy story of a guy who set up a profile on a dating app... AS A WOMAN.

He wanted to see what it was like on the other side of the app.

It's such a wild story, that I'm gonna paste it here, and then come back with commentary at the end, so you know how to apply it to you.

START STORY:

Three days ago, I ran a dating experiment.

I made a Hinge profile as a woman named Madison and watched what happened.

If you don't know her it's Madison Campbell my good friend. Just a normal, cute girl profile in NYC.

Within 24 hours, Madison had more likes than most men will receive in their entire time on dating apps.

And that was just the beginning.

Day 1: The Flood

Madison went live on Hinge around 10 am.

By the time I checked the app again that afternoon, the notifications were out of control.

Likes were pouring in nonstop.

By the 24-hour mark (before getting banned), Madison had:

- 1,500+ likes
- Hundreds of messages
- Hundreds of "roses" from men trying to stand out

Within hours, one thing became obvious:

As a man, you compete.

As a woman, you filter.

Men are trying to get noticed.

Women are trying not to get overwhelmed. It was INSANE seeing the other side lol.

What Dating Apps Feel Like for Men

For most guys, the dating app experience looks like this:

- You download the app.
- You build your profile.
- You swipe for days.
- You get a few matches.
- Half don't reply.
- A quarter ghost after two messages.
- Maybe one turns into a date.

It feels like a job interview where you're constantly being rejected by companies that never even tell you why.

Scarcity defines the experience.

What Dating Apps Feel Like for Women

As Madison, the experience was the opposite.

It didn't feel like searching.

It felt like drowning in options.

The likes came so fast that it was impossible to evaluate each guy fairly.

So what do you do?

You start filtering fast:

- Quick look at the first photo
- Check height
- Check job
- Decide in two seconds

Not because you're shallow.

Because you literally don't have the time to do anything else.

When you have 1,500 options, everyone becomes disposable. It truly was impossible to keep up.

Day 2: Fat Madison

Then we ran the second phase.

This time, Madison was heavier... like 50-100 pounds heavier lol.

Still normal. Still someone you'd see every day.

Still someone with a full personality and life.

Within the first 24 hours, the numbers looked pretty much the same:

500 likes on FEELD which isn't even a popular app

Nothing about Madison's humor, interests, or personality changed.

It's just crazy how men will basically swipe right for anything on apps because they are that desperate to get matches.

SAD!

Day 3: Non-Jewish Madison

The third phase was more subtle. We joined a jewish dating app, but made Madison not jewish. (But willing to convert)

The total likes were basically the same, truthfully nothing changed!

Even on a serious jewish dating app, men still liked her.

The Big Truth: Men and Women Are Not Using the Same App

After 72 hours as Madison, one thing was crystal clear:

Men and women are not experiencing the same product.

They're living in completely different worlds.

For men:

- It's a competition.
- You're trying to stand out.
- You're hoping for a match.
- You're hoping she replies.

For women:

- It's a filtering system.
- You're trying to reduce chaos.
- You're trying to avoid weirdos.
- You're trying to find one decent option in a sea of noise.

Men experience scarcity.

Women experience overload.

OK, it's Taki back again.

Now, before anyone gets weird in the replies:

This isn't about men vs women.

It's about volume.

On a dating app, when you've got 1,500 options, you filter and choose.

When you've got 3, you compete and chase.

The coaching market is exactly the same.

Most coaches are playing on hard mode, like being on Hinge as a man.

Cold DMs.

"Just bumping this up."

Overdelivering and undercharging.

Taking whoever says yes.

Because when you only have 3 leads, Every one of them feels like 'the one'.

Scarcity makes you behave in ways you don't even like.

You follow up when you know you shouldn't.

You lower prices when you swore you wouldn't.

You take clients you can feel are wrong.

It's not a mindset problem. It's not your confidence. Or imposter syndrome.

YOU HAVE A DEMAND PROBLEM.

Power in business comes from options.

Scarcity makes you chase. Demand lets you choose.

Me and my clients used to chase. Now we choose.

It's better.

Find a window, and throw a brick through it

EST. DATE	Late 2025 (Medium confidence) 'Only 15k subscribers'. In Nov 2025 DMs (#16) Taki says he's '9 months in' on YouTube.
EMAIL FORMAT	Philosophy Framework (3 steps)
TOPICS	Contrarian positioning Attention
BIG IDEA	Find the common advice (the window) and throw your better new way (the brick) through it.
PROOF & ASSETS	Peer quote on why Taki's YouTube works; 6 old-way vs new-way pairs; 3-step exercise.
YOUTUBE POTENTIAL ●●●●●
VIDEO FORMAT	Framework explainer; old-vs-new list makes great on-screen graphics
WORKING TITLE	How to Get Attention in a Crowded Market: Throw a Brick
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"How is Taki Moore getting thousands of views with only 15K subscribers?" Here's the answer."

In the attention economy there are two kinds of people:

Those who get attention.

And those who don't.

Most coaches don't get anywhere near the attention they desire, or deserve.

Someone in a YouTube community I'm in asked:

"How is Taki Moore getting thousands of views with only 15k subscribers?"

A veteran coach who's done incredibly well on YouTube said:

"Because it's new info.

The business space is totally screwed right now, we have insane competition and advice that is repeated over and over

Taki is coming at the niche with a tonne of new ideas and ways to do things, he's solving the problems people hate like sales calls in ways you dont really hear anywhere else and then hes got the numbers and experience to back it up."

In a cesspool of recycled ideas, the reason my stuff is hitting right now is simple:

I'm doing (and saying) the opposite of most people.

Not to try and be provocative. But because I think there's a new, better way.

A decade ago, I met a couple who were blowing up on facebook.

Their comment sections looked like a bar fight.

(THAT'S HOW YOU KNOW YOU'RE ONTO SOMETHING).

Nobody rushes to the comment section of a 'safe' post.

I asked them what their strategy was, and they replied:

"Find a window, and throw a brick through it".

The window is the common advice in your space. The things that everyone tells you to do.

And the brick is your new, contrarian, better way.

Almost everyone in our space learned from someone... who learned from someone... who learned from someone... who probably learned from me :-)

I'm happy to help, but it's why everything feels the same, and worse over time.

It's like marketing inbreeding.

Everyone looks the same.

Sounds the same.

And gets a little dumber every year.

The biggest danger you have is to look at the world through the same window everyone else is.

Your secret weapon is a brick.

The brick of a new way.

Here's a few examples of old ways everyone else does it, and the new ways we've mastered that are working better right now.

Sales calls Vs Salesless™

$60k a month in adspend vs $6k a month, and 5x'd our business

Traffic & Funnels vs Magnetic & Bingeable

Big team and meetings Vs No meetings

Chasing for prospects Vs Capping supply and selling out

Free webinars Vs Paid workshops

See the difference?

Here's how to find your new ways:

1. Make a list of all the windows in your industry: The common advice and common practice your competitors teach.
2. Then, make a list of bricks. New better ways that shatter the existing windows, and get people begging to find out how to work with you.
3. Throw your bricks through their windows. Tell people why the old way is dumb, and contrast it with your new way.

ATTENTION FOLLOWS THE PEOPLE THROWING BRICKS.

NOT THE ONES POLISHING WINDOWS.

TAKI 'BROKEN WINDOWS' MOORE

We can tell

EST. DATE	2025-26 (Low confidence) AI-content discourse.
EMAIL FORMAT	Hot take
TOPICS	AI contentAuthenticity
BIG IDEA	'AI writes all my stuff' isn't a flex. We can tell.
PROOF & ASSETS	Aussie 'pinky' anti-speeding ad (RTA).
YOUTUBE POTENTIAL
VIDEO FORMAT	Short (≤60s): pinky gesture on camera
WORKING TITLE	'AI Writes All My Content' Isn't the Flex You Think
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"The best road-safety ad ever made didn't tell anyone to slow down. It embarrassed them."

The most effective road safety ad I've ever seen didn't tell people to stop speeding.
It just embarrassed them.
It showed young Aussie blokes in their cars, speeding past women.
Trying to look cool.
The women looked back, raised their pinky finger, and made the gesture.

Brutal, but effective.
The guys thought they looked like men.
The women knew they were just little boys.
That's exactly how I feel when I see someone boasting that they've got an AI system that writes all their content for them.
My pinky finger gets twitchy, like the women in the ads.
"AI writes all my stuff" isn't the flex you think it is.

We can tell.

If you're not in it, you're not a creator. You're just another lame GPT sock puppet, and you just earned yourself an unfollow.

I reckon we should make this a thing.

The next time someone proudly tells you AI writes all their stuff:

Just smile.

Raise your pinky finger.

And comment:

"WE CAN TELL." TAKI 'PINKY PROMISE' MOORE

PART 3

Buying

Sales every week, nothing sold.

12 The sales call is the problem

13 Free webinars are a magnet for broke tire-kickers

14 I got mugged by a reggae CD salesman

15 The Silent Offer

16 He made me beg (see pics)

17 The 50¢ sales fix

18 Mid-Pitch Puberty

The sales call is the problem

EST. DATE	2025-26 (Medium confidence) 'More than 1,000 clients are doing it'; 9 → 45 sales/month.
EMAIL FORMAT	Sales letter Plan (Doc → Deadline → Demand)
TOPICS	Salesless Sales calls Offer
BIG IDEA	Sales calls aren't the answer; they're the friction. People hate being sold but love buying.
PROOF & ASSETS	9 salespeople/9 sales → 0 salespeople/45 sales a month; Rodric $60K/yr → $130K/mo; 3-step method.

YOUTUBE POTENTIAL

VIDEO FORMAT

WORKING TITLE

COLD-OPEN HOOK

FLAGSHIP pillar video (15-20 min): the Salesless method end-to-end

Sales Calls Are Killing Your Coaching Business

"2 no-shows, 1 reschedule, 1 unqualified, and 1 guy who needed to 'ask his wife'."

.....

You want more clients.

And right now, getting them feels way harder than it should.

You're doing what every guru in the industry tells you to do:
booking more sales calls,
working to get people to show up, and trying to get them to buy.

It sounds smart.

But it's why this whole thing feels so hard.

Monday morning, you're posting content, working the DM's & following up, trying to get a few people into the calendar.

You get a few replies here and there. But mostly silence.

A few hours later, you've booked 1 call. Maybe 2.

And tomorrow you've got to do it all again.

Yay.

You put aside Thursday afternoon for the 5 calls you got booked in.

2 no-shows, 1 reschedule, 1 who wasn't qualified at all, and 1 guy who said yes, then asked if you could send him a proposal so he could show his wife.

GREAT.

If you keep this up long enough, and get good enough at sales calls, eventually you can buy your time back and hire someone else to do them.

You don't have to do sales calls anymore. Instead, you have to manage a sales team wasting your leads. Babysitting setters and sucking up to closers and listening to them whinge that the leads are crap.

Marketing says sales can't close and sales says marketing sucks.

So you're not really 'coaching'.

You either work in a call centre. Or you manage one.

Those situations look different, but it's the same problem underneath:

Think about it.

You're trying to get more clients through a process that makes it harder for people to buy.

Because they don't want a sales call.

So every step just adds friction.

Booking the call is friction.

Showing up to the call is friction.

Being sold on the call is friction.

At every step, people leak out.

So what do most coaches try to do?

They try to optimise it.

Improve the booking rate. Lift the show-up percentages. Get better at closing.

That's why this is sooooo dumb:

You're not solving the actual problem.

You're getting better at a process that gets in the way.

You're not here to get more calls.

You're here to get more clients.

I know this is heady. Stay with me for a sec.

We're about to land this:

If the goal is to get more clients, then trying to get someone to book a call they don't want, show up when they know they're gonna be sold to, and buy on a call they've been resisting the whole time feels kinda silly.

That's why it's hard to get people to book.

That's why they don't show.

And it's why they don't buy.

Sales calls aren't the answer. They're the problem.

They are the reason you don't have enough clients.

Sales calls cost me more money than they ever made me.

So far, we've established that people hate being sold.

BUT THEY LOVE BUYING.

And that idea changed everything for me.

We ditched our sales process. And built a buying process.

We went from a team of 9 salespeople making 9 sales a month, to 45 sales a month with no salespeople and no sales calls.

We call it Salesless™.

More than 1,000 clients are doing it too.

Big names with huge audiences.

And brand new beginners making their first sale.

(And everyone in between).

Rodric went from $60k a year to $130k a month. Salesless.

No calls.

Turns out, the thing everyone tells you to do to get clients is the thing getting in the way.

Salesless™ works better.

No chasing. No convincing. No ghosting. No fence-sitters. No babysitting closers or paying 20% commissions.

Just a simpler way for the right person to go from "I need help with this" to "I'm in".

Here's how it works:

First, the Doc.

You can sign a client without a call this week with a compelling offer, in an offer doc that makes it easy for the right person to say yes.

Second, the Deadline.

A 5-day campaign that focuses attention and gets people to buy. Now you can make sales every week.

Third, we add Demand.

Growing your audience and getting them hot and primed, so when you make the offer, they buy. That's how you scale it up to a client every day, or more.

That's the whole thing.

TAKI 'SALESLESS' MOORE

Free webinars are a magnet for broke tire-kickers

EST. DATE	2025 (Low confidence) '1,300 people have bought tickets' to workshops so far.
EMAIL FORMAT	Experiment/results Plan
TOPICS	Paid workshops Lead quality
BIG IDEA	Swap free for paid, webinar for workshop. $100 filters out tire-kickers.
PROOF & ASSETS	5% → 55% qualified overnight; 1,300 attendees, never below 50%; idea → selling in 3 hours.

YOUTUBE POTENTIAL ●●●●●

VIDEO FORMAT	Old vs new breakdown with the numbers on screen
WORKING TITLE	Stop Running Free Webinars (Do This Instead)
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"95% of the people who come to your free webinar will never buy."

When we run a free webinar, 95% of the people who register (and attend) are the wrong people.

They're great folks, but they're too early-stage for the invitation I want to make.

If your ideal client is anyone other than a beginner, you've probably had the same experience.

5% qualified. 95% not.

The truth is that busy, high-value prospects will NEVER attend your free webinar, but will happily pay to learn from you.

After 15 years of teaching high-level strategies to people who weren't ready to do anything with them, I ran an experiment.

The people who attend free webinars are mostly people with nothing but time.

They register for everything. They show up, desperately looking for free information. And they don't buy.

You work your ass off to design the webinar. You fill it. Then you spend an hour and a half delivering it, building up to the crescendo, the invitation.

And NOTHING HAPPENS.

The problem wasn't your talk.

It was your audience.

Pearls and swine.

The secret for us has been simple, and life-changing:

We swapped free for paid. And webinar for workshop.

We charge a nominal amount to attend. Usually $100.

It's high enough that the broke tire-kickers won't go near it.

But for the right person, $100 is nothing. It's an impulse buy.

In one move, we weed out the people who aren't qualified.

And by running a hands-on workshop, we make it instantly useful for the people who are actually in the game.

A complete solution to a known problem.

The first time we ran a paid workshop, we went from a measly 5% qualified attendees to 55%, overnight.

Since then, 1,300 people have bought tickets and attended our workshops, and the percentage has never dropped below 50% ideal clients.

And that's where the magic starts.

EVERYTHING YOU WANT IN YOUR BUSINESS IS DOWNSTREAM FROM ATTRACTING IDEAL PROSPECTS.

THE SALES PIPELINE GETS FILLED.

YOU SIGN CLIENTS.

THE BUSINESS GROWS.

And it's almost effortless when you've got a SYSTEM.

We can go from an idea for a workshop, to pages built and people buying tickets, in 3 hours.

Because there's a system.

TAKI 'NO FREE RIDES' MOORE

I got mugged by a reggae CD salesman

EST. DATE	2025-26 (Low confidence) Salesless-era close.
EMAIL FORMAT	Personal story (comedy) Lesson
TOPICS	Pressure selling Retention Buyer's remorse
BIG IDEA	Clients who feel sold avoid you like a mugger. They go quiet and leave. Buyers stay.
PROOF & ASSETS	Chandler FILMED the whole thing. Photo of the 3 CDs. $60 Apple Pay shakedown. Hare Krishna flower trick.
YOUTUBE POTENTIAL
VIDEO FORMAT	Story-led video cut with Chandler's real footage. High-retention storytelling.
WORKING TITLE	I Got Scammed on Venice Beach (It Explains Why Your Clients Quit)
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"You like reggae music?" Fatal mistake."

I was halfway down Venice Beach when it happened.

I knew I should walk away, but I froze.

I was walking with my mate Chandler.

We'd known each other online for years, happened to be in LA at the same time, so we grabbed coffee and breakfast at Great White (an Aussie cafe).

Then we went for a stroll. Sun's out, boardwalk buzzing, Muscle Beach off to the right with the big dudes doing big dude things.

Then I hear reggae music.

There's a Jamaican guy, big smile, totally vibing. He clocks me and calls out "Eh man."

I go: "Wagwan, me broder!"

He laughs. Instant connection.

"You like reggae music?"

"Love reggae music."

"I've got a gift for you."

He hands me a CD.

I don't want a CD. Who even owns a CD player?

Chandler keeps walking. Then turns around and sees I'm still there.

At which point he starts filming.

Because he knows what's about to happen.

The trap is set, and I walked right into it.

"What's your name?"

"Taki."

"How you spell it?"

He grabs a fresh CD, uncaps a Sharpie, writes TO TAKI in big letters, and swaps it for the one he gave me.

Now I'm holding a personalised CD I didn't ask for, from a bloke I met 45 seconds ago.

And I feel the trap close.

He can't sell this to anyone else now. And I can't hand it back without being a dickhead.

The social contract has been written in Sharpie, and it has my name on it.

*I knew exactly what was happening as it happened.
I just couldn't figure out how to leave.*

"Wanna make a small donation?"

Oldest trick in the book. Perfected by the Hare Krishnas in the 90's: give someone a flower as a 'love gift', then guilt them into donating.

Most people paid just to escape the conversation, then binned the flower the moment they were out of sight.

(The Hare Krishnas pulled all the discarded flowers out of the bins every half hour, and would 'love gift' them again to the next lot of unsuspecting schmucks)

Anyway, I start desperately backpedalling.

"Sorry mate, I've got no cash. No coins, no notes, nothing."

True story.

I should've handed it back and walked away.

I knew that.

Didn't do it.

"I guess I could do Apple Pay."

Fatal mistake.

He smiles. Calls his friends over.

2 more guys materialise, each handing me a CD.

Now I've got the whole Rasta Shakedown Crew around me.

Before I can say anything, I'm holding 3 CDs I don't want and cannot play.

One of them is set up to take Apple Pay.

I guess it's gonna be 20 bucks. I figure I'll pay and then get outta dodge.

He grabs his phone. Types fast. Shoves it under mine before I can read the amount.

Beep!

I look at the screen.

$60!

WTAF?

"OK, that's for my CD. Now for my 2 friends."

I lost it.

"Dude. You just charged me $60 for a CD I didn't want. A brand new CD from an actual shop would be $20. You ripped me off. And now you want me to pay for 2 more CDs? This is not okay."

"Relax broder, we cool."

We were not cool.

Meanwhile Chandler is 20 metres away, phone raised, filming everything, absolutely losing it with laughter.

So, $60 poorer, and the proud owner of 3 bootleg reggae CD's I'll never listen to, I walked away, feeling jibbed.

It's not the money. I've got the cash.

It stings, but it's fine, because I knew I'd never see those guys again.

That got me thinking.

What if I had to walk past them every day on my way to work?

I'd find a different route. It'd be worth it to add 10 minutes to my commute just to avoid seeing the CD Sales Muggers again.

That's exactly what it feels like when your clients feel sold.

Imagine feeling sold into a $10k coaching program, then having to look your mugger in the eye every week to ask for help.

So they don't.

It's why clients silently disengage.

Most don't ask for a refund. They go quiet, and leave.

Then cancel their membership and tell their friends about the coach who ripped them off.

Not because your coaching is bad.

BECAUSE THEY NEVER BOUGHT.

THEY WERE SOLD.

Salesless™ is the opposite.

No pressure. No arm twisting or manipulative sales bullshit.

No Rasta Shakedown Crew.

When people excitedly buy, they become your best clients ever.

They play. They stay. They pay.

And they tell their friends about you.

TAKI 'WANT A CD?' MOORE

The Silent Offer

EST. DATE	Undated (— confidence) Evergreen thought experiment.
EMAIL FORMAT	Thought experiment
TOPICS	Offer design
BIG IDEA	If your offer can't win a nod in total silence, it needs work. A good offer sells itself.
PROOF & ASSETS	Vivid white-room scenario (very visual).

YOUTUBE POTENTIAL ●●●●●

VIDEO FORMAT	Staged visual (white room, timer) or animated Short
WORKING TITLE	Would Your Offer Sell in Complete Silence?
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"5 minutes. One sheet of paper. Nobody's allowed to talk."

Imagine this weird sales scenario:

You walk into a modern, brightly-lit meeting room.

Everything is white, except for a small black table and 2 chairs.

Sitting in one of the chairs is your perfect prospect, ready to see what you're offering.

The door quietly clicks shut behind you.

It's just the 2 of you.

As you sit, a 5 minute timer on the wall begins silently counting down.

You have their undivided attention for 5 minutes, but there's 1 rule:

In this sales scenario, neither of you is allowed to talk, or write anything down.

No drawing of models, and no weird charade pantomimes either.

Complete silence.

The only thing you're allowed to do is hand your prospect a single sheet of paper, with your current offer typed on it.

And the only thing they're allowed to do is read it, and nod yes to buy, or shake their head no to pass.

I know, I know. It's a weird game with strange rules.

I have an overactive imagination, but I want to know:

If they read your current offer, would your perfect prospect nod or shake their head?

If you're unsure, your offer isn't strong enough to stand on its own, and until it does, your business won't grow like you want it to.

That's what you should work on right now.

See, whether they do it to your face or not, your prospects are shaking their heads to pass right now.

Because your offer doesn't stand on its own.

You might sign some clients despite it, because of your social content or sales skills, but all that is compensating for a weak offer.

A GOOD OFFER DOESN'T NEED SELLING.

A GOOD OFFER SELLS ITSELF.

It should stand on its own, and get the right people to say yes.

If you get objections, excuses and stalls, your offer needs work.

Your offer shouldn't need selling.

It should sell itself.

Fix that, and watch what happens.

TAKI 'SILENT OFFER' MOORE

He made me beg (see pics)

EST. DATE	Early 2026 (High confidence) DM screenshots are dated 27–28 Nov 2025, and the email says 'a few months ago'.
EMAIL FORMAT	Case study (screenshots)
TOPICS	FrictionBuying processSalesless
BIG IDEA	You lose sales you can't see because your process won't let people just buy.
PROOF & ASSETS	6 real DM screenshots; $9,995 purchase; 9 → 45 sales/mo ('36 lost sales a month'); a $30–60K sale every 16 hours.
YOUTUBE POTENTIAL
VIDEO FORMAT	Screen-share breakdown of the DM thread
WORKING TITLE	I Tried to Give Him $10K. He Made Me Beg.
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"I asked for the price. Then the link. Then the link again."
HEADS-UP	Blur the seller's identity in the screenshots.

The market has already shifted.

And your sales process is pushing buyers away.

Here's what I mean:

When I find someone online who looks like they can help me, I don't opt-in to the funnel. And I'm not gonna book a call.

I don't need to be sold.

I just want to buy.

So I message them direct and ask to buy the best thing they've got.

But the sales prevention department keeps getting in the way.

Here's what happened when I tried to buy a YouTube thing a few months ago without a sales call.

Hey legend.

What have you got for someone like me?

New at YouTube (9 months in). Selling out every month.

I want it to be fun.

I suck at packaging.

I don't want to copy others. I'm more artist than business guy.

But your stuff is super solid, and I'm curious.

Lemme know if you think you can help... or if I'm too stuck in my own way 😊

...

I'm asking for help, and he knows who I am.

After some useful feedback, he didn't ask if I'd like to join him.

Next year I might have something more exclusive but im looking to optimise for time freedom now not business growth, so its likely itll just be on demand and ai after this with no support.

...

Taki Moore 27 Nov 2025

Thanks for the thoughtful reply mate.

It hurts because it's true 😊

How much is it to join you?

...

And I had to beg him for the price.

Hi Taki

Its $9995 for the 6 months

...

Taki Moore 28 Nov 2025

Amazing. Is there a link to sign up?

↩ Reply

➦ Forward

I'm clearly in. I ask for a link to buy.

Instead he inserts friction, and offers me a call.

Hi Taki

Yea I can get that to you, just checking, you got any questions and understand the offer etc?

If so ill send it over, otherwise can get one of the team to teach out for a call

...

Taki Moore 28 Nov 2025

I think I get it.

You can help me. It costs 10k.

Shoot me the link

"I get it. You can help me. It costs 10k."

I don't want a call. I want to buy.

Link please? (again)

This is the sign up link, we've got 19 spaces left .

Just to confirm

1. 6 Months support (this is done in Discord with myself and my team, ask whatever you like, submit things for feedback etc, I'd recommend you use this as much as you can)
2. 5 live calls a week, I take 2
3. Keep the content forever
4. Ai platform for 6 months

Theres no 1-2-1 private call stuff.

Otherwise that's everything.

I've made my decision. He's still explaining.

Taki Moore 28 Nov 2025

Thanks mate. I just paid.

Thanks for all you do

He made his first $10k sale without a call!

But let's be clear:

That sale didn't happen because of the process. It happened in spite of it.

His process kept getting in the way, and I kept pushing forward.

Most buyers don't.

They just walk away and find someone else.

The worst thing is that you're losing sales you didn't even know existed.

They're invisible.

Think about it: You can see who booked. You can see who bought.

But you can't see all the people who would've bought, but didn't.

Because your sales process wouldn't let them just buy.

When we stopped forcing people to jump on sales calls, it was like releasing the hand brake.

When we removed the obstacle, we went from 9 sales a month to 45.

Those buyers were already there. They just didn't want to get on a call.

(Turns out forcing sales calls was costing me 36 sales every month).

Your book-a-call process is probably costing more sales than it's making too.

Plus, you don't even like doing them, so there's that.

Every 16 hours, someone buys a $30-60k program from us, without talking to anyone.

WE DON'T SELL. THEY BUY. TAKI "SALESLESS SELLS MORE" MOORE

The 50¢ sales fix

EST. DATE	Undated (— confidence) Older story ('Years ago'); evergreen.
EMAIL FORMAT	Personal story (comedy)
TOPICS	Sales hygiene Hidden objections
BIG IDEA	People won't tell you the real reason they didn't buy. Find the missing Tic Tac.
PROOF & ASSETS	Photo holding a 50¢ coin; bad-breath PT story.

YOUTUBE POTENTIAL

●●●●●

VIDEO FORMAT	Story Short or 5-min story video
WORKING TITLE	The 50-Cent Fix for Losing Sales
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"He had the perfect sales process. I ran and never went back."

Have you ever talked with a 'perfect' prospect, and everything seems to go well, but they don't buy?

Years ago, I had a free session with a Personal Trainer who had the most incredible sales process I'd ever seen.

When I left home for the gym that morning, I told Kiri-Maree how excited I was to start getting into shape. I KNEW I'd be hiring a PT that day.

His gym was immaculate, he was professional, and he worked his system perfectly.

He matched & mirrored, helped me see a vision of what's possible and identified the gaps. I was ready to buy.

He sold programs: blocks of 9 weeks with a specific result, a sexy title, and a payment plan.

THIS SHOULD HAVE BEEN A SLAM DUNK.

He was selling exactly what I wanted. Right when I needed it. In exactly the way I like to be sold.

BUT INSTEAD OF BUYING I RAN LIKE CRAZY, AND NEVER WENT BACK.

I got home, and Kiri-Maree asked how it was. I told her I couldn't go through with it. Something happened that meant I never wanted to see that trainer ever again.

IT HAPPENED WHILE I WAS DOING SIT-UPS.

I was working hard, pulling my out-of-shape body up in crunches.

He was doing his job: Getting in my face and pushing me hard.

Telling me not to quit.

"Just 5 more"

"C'mon, Taki. You can do it"

And that was the problem. I'm working my butt off, and just as I get to the top of the sit-up to gasp for air, he's shouting in my face with atrocious BAD BREATH.

And I had no choice but to breathe it in, and prepare for my next sit-up.

Smelt like satan's asshole.

All the excitement about my new body and my new gym evaporated, and all I could think about was "I'm not signing up for 9 weeks of having to breathe this guy's halitosis".

30 minutes of rancid bad breath is more than anyone should have to endure.

As soon as the workout was over, I thanked him for his time, said I'd think about it, and ran like crazy.

THERE'S NO POINT INVESTING THOUSANDS IN MARKETING, FUNNELS, SALES TRAINING OR ANYTHING ELSE IF YOU WON'T INVEST 50 CENTS IN A TIC TAC.

You don't sell face to face like the PT did. But if you're missing deals you shoulda got, there's something smelly in your process, and a Tic Tac missing somewhere.

People won't tell you the REAL reason they don't buy. Not to your face, anyway.

If you've had a run of people say 'no' lately, I can guarantee that it's not them. It's something you're doing (or not doing) that's making them run.

And you need to fix it fast, or the dry spell will continue.

TAKI 'TIC TAC' MOORE

Mid-Pitch Puberty

EST. DATE	2025-26 (Medium confidence) 'A couple of weeks ago... 1,000 people bought tickets, 45 joined Black Belt'.
EMAIL FORMAT	Confession Philosophy
TOPICS	Selling in content Pitching Workshops
BIG IDEA	'Teach then sell' is broken because of the word 'then'. The best content teaches people what to want.
PROOF & ASSETS	1,000-ticket workshop → 45 Black Belt sales with an almost non-existent pitch.
YOUTUBE POTENTIAL ●●●●●
VIDEO FORMAT	Breakdown / teardown of the workshop's 'teach what to want' moves
WORKING TITLE	Why Your Pitch Feels So Awkward (Teach-Then-Sell Is Broken)
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"For years I had Mid-Pitch Puberty."

For years I suffered from Mid-Pitch Puberty.

The first hour of my webinars was great. I was teaching like a boss. Swag dialled up to 11. Value bombs dropping left, right and centre.

I was in my element.

People were engaged. The chat was lighting up. Everyone was having fun.

Until I got to the pitch.

And everything changed.

My swagger disappeared. My confidence evaporated. My voice dried up. My palms got sweaty. All my certainty vanished.

Right at moneytime, I sounded like a 13-year-old kid whose voice had just broken trying to ask a girl out for the first time.

Mid-Pitch Puberty.

For years, I thought the solution was learning how to sell better.

It wasn't.

I thought my job was to teach, then sell.

The problem wasn't teaching. I was good at it. They needed me to do it. It's our job.

There's nothing wrong with selling either. Inviting people to get more help is useful for them, and good for your business.

So in Teach then sell:

The problem wasn't teaching.

The problem wasn't selling.

The problem was the word "then."

Because it made me think they were 2 separate activities. And that's why I went from stud to dud so fast.

These days I think about it completely differently.

THE BEST CONTENT DOESN'T JUST TEACH PEOPLE WHAT TO DO.
IT TEACHES PEOPLE WHAT TO WANT.

That's true in webinars. It's true in workshops. It's true in YouTube videos. It's true in emails. It's true everywhere.

A couple of weeks ago I ran a public workshop. 1,000 people bought tickets, and 45 people joined Black Belt.

Afterwards, someone in Black Belt asked if they could get the recording because they wanted to see the pitch at the end.

I told them they'd be sorely disappointed.

Because the pitch was almost non-existent.

The interesting bit was everything that happened before it.

I went back through the workshop afterwards and pulled apart the key things I was deliberately doing throughout the session to teach people what to want.

The kind of things that make your content more useful, more engaging and way more persuasive.

If I had to identify the one micro-skill that's had the biggest impact on my business, it's probably this:

The ability to sell in a way that feels like content and teach in a way that gets people to move.

TAKI 'TONGUE-FU' MOORE

PART 4

Money

Clean, unapologetic pricing.

19 Briefcase Pricing

20 Confessions of a pricing chicken

21 You're too small to be cheap

22 The $97,000 flight to Tokyo

23 We sold all our furniture

24 Spilling the beans

Briefcase Pricing

EST. DATE	Undated (story 2004) (— confidence) Throwback story from 2004.
EMAIL FORMAT	Throwback story Philosophy
TOPICS	Pricing
BIG IDEA	Your price is written in chalk, not stone. Prospects don't know what it's 'supposed' to be.
PROOF & ASSETS	Secretly added $250/mo to each agreement; $1K → $5K/mo; David never knew.
YOUTUBE POTENTIAL ●●●●●
VIDEO FORMAT	Story-led long-form or Short; very thumbnail-able
WORKING TITLE	I Secretly Raised My Boss's Prices 5x. He Never Knew.
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"Every time he signed a client, I snuck in and changed the price."

You need to loosen up about your pricing.

Most coaches stress about their price, treating it like it's set in stone.

It's not.

I want you to treat your price more like the $4.50 price of a cappuccino, hastily scrawled on a chalkboard at a busy cafe in Rome.

The cafe owner's not hung up on price, because she knows it's written in chalk.

If it's high season and she wants the price to go up to $5, she just erases the 4.50 price, and writes a 5.

And if she wants to drop it to $4, that's a simple 'wipe and rewrite' away too.

No matter what you've been charging until now, your price can be whatever the hell you want it to be.

And you can change it today.

Back in 2004, I was running the marketing and pre-sales process for a guy called David.

My job was to get the leads, book appointments, pre-qualify, walk them through every step in the process... so David could do his job: Read the lead sheet, grab his briefcase with the 2-page agreement in it, and drive to the prospect's business for the sales appointment.

When I started, he had 4 clients at $1,000 a month each, but I thought he was waaay undercharging.

So here's what I did:

Every time he signed up a new client, I'd sneak in and edit the agreement in Microsoft Word, and add $250 a month to the price.

Then I'd print it out, and put the new (higher priced) agreement in the briefcase, ready for the next sales appointment.

Oh! One more thing:

I never told David that I raised his prices.

So he'd walk into the sales meeting, and if it went well, he'd bring out the agreement, and walk them through page 1, which was all about the program.

And when it was time to talk price, he'd turn to page 2, and have to keep a straight face while he quoted whatever number I'd entered.

Prospects couldn't see his legs shaking in fear under the table, and they had no idea it was the most he'd ever charged!

The pricing fear was all in his head, and the prospects didn't know what it was 'supposed' to be, so they just signed up.

This little hack took David's pricing from $1,000 a month to $5,000 a month.

ALL BECAUSE SOMEONE ELSE KNEW HIS VALUE, AND DECIDED WHAT HE SHOULD CHARGE.

TAKI 'BRIEFCASE' MOORE

Confessions of a pricing chicken

EST. DATE	Undated (— confidence) Early-career story; evergreen.
EMAIL FORMAT	Confession	Framework (ROI/COI, 20x)
TOPICS	Pricing	Confidence
BIG IDEA	Your confidence has nothing to do with your value. Price on client ROI and cost of inaction.
PROOF & ASSETS	Adam's '$20 book vs $20K program' line; value = 20x price.

YOUTUBE POTENTIAL ●●●●●

VIDEO FORMAT	Talking-head story + simple framework graphic
WORKING TITLE	Your Confidence Has Nothing to Do With Your Price
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"He gave me his card details, then said, 'Can I give you some feedback? You're too cheap.'"

I'm in a cabin in New Zealand. On the phone with a prospect. We're a perfect match.

He asks about the price ($15k at the time). He says yes, and gives me his card details.

I'm feeling that post-sale victory glow — until he says: "Can I give you some feedback?"

Sure, I nervously said.

"You're too cheap".

I awkwardly told him it was $15k because I believed that the moment I charged over $18k I became responsible for my clients.

(I know it's dumb. $18k is cool, but the moment it hits $18,001 it's somehow a whole different deal!)

I was young and inexperienced at the time. I heard someone say it, and just took it as gospel.

"That's Bullshit" said Adam.

"If I buy a $20k book from you, but I never open it. Never read it, and never implement, and never get any results... whose fault is that?"

Yours, I confidently stated.

Yep.

"And if I buy a $20,000 coaching program from you, but I never show up to any of the calls or events. I never watch any of the training, and never implement anything, and never get any results... whose fault is that?"

I stumbled... Well, it's sorta both of our fault.

"Bullshit. It's the exact same thing. The only difference is that you're more comfortable with $20 than you are with $20 grand."

Right. Between. The eyes.

"Don't raise your price on me, but make sure you charge what it's worth from now on".

That conversation shifted me.

I was a pricing chicken.

Got me thinking about pricing, and confidence. I didn't like where it took me.

See, there's a ton of coaches who overcharge because they think they're great, but aren't.

And there are thousands of coaches who undercharge because they don't think they're great, but actually have the goods.

Both of them make this mistake: Whether you think too highly of yourself, or too lowly of yourself... you're thinking of yourself!

It's a mistake because value isn't about you at all. Your value is in the client.

Your confidence is irrelevant.

That's great news for you and I, because instead of trying to pump up your confidence, we're gonna bypass it.

Instead of letting your self-esteem inflate or deflate your price, we're gonna set a price based on the ROI that your clients get from working with you and the Cost Of Inaction (COI).

ROI and COI is how you measure value.

We set a price that gives clients an incredible ROI, and a healthy profit for you.

Value should be 20x the Price.

Makes it easy to sell, and easy to buy... regardless of your self-confidence.

REMEMBER. YOUR CONFIDENCE HAS NOTHING TO DO WITH YOUR VALUE. SET A PRICE BASED ON THEIR ROI, NOT ON YOUR SELF ESTEEM.

TAKI 'ONLY COMFORTABLE WITH A $20 BOOK' MOORE

You're too small to be cheap

EST. DATE	Undated (— confidence) Evergreen.
EMAIL FORMAT	Framework (maths)Plan
TOPICS	PricingOffer designBeginners
BIG IDEA	You're too small to be cheap. The maths lands most coaches at a $2-5K offer.
PROOF & ASSETS	Kraft-paper volume-vs-price log-scale diagram; $100K/yr breakdown.
YOUTUBE POTENTIAL
VIDEO FORMAT	Whiteboard maths explainer; great for newer coaches
WORKING TITLE	You're Too Small to Be Cheap
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"To make $100K you need 100,000 clients at $1... or 10 at $10K."

I'm gonna tell you straight:

Your audience is small. Your income is low. Your skills are still developing.
And your confidence isn't where it needs to be.
That's why it's so tempting to lower your prices.
but.
but but but but BUT!
You can't.

Because the math doesn't math.

YOU'RE TOO SMALL TO BE CHEAP.

Think about it:
Let's say you want to earn $100k this year.
You could get:
100,000 clients paying $1
10,000 clients paying $10
1,000 clients paying $100
100 clients paying $1,000
10 clients paying $10,000
Or 1 client paying $100,000

Now look at those numbers honestly.

You don't have the audience for 1,000, 10,000 or 100,000 clients, so let's get rid of those.

And unless you're doing something pretty special, no-one's gonna pay you $100,000 either.

So let's get rid of that too.

What's left?

100 clients at $1,000.

and

10 clients at $10,000.

Chances are, the sweet spot is somewhere in between.

For most coaches, that's a $2k-$5k offer.

High enough that a handful of clients can change your month, and low enough that prospects don't make excuses and ghost you.

At $3k, you only need 3 or 4 clients a month to hit $10k.

Now, if you've never sold something for $2-5k before, you might have just pooped your pants a little bit.

Don't worry. I won't say a word.

You don't need to become some slick high-ticket closer or anything weird.

Design your offer so when people see it, they see the value, and want to get started.

It'll be obvious to them... and to you.

Magic happens when you look at your own offer and think:

"Holy crap. I'd buy this in a nanosecond."

You'll be confident, and they'll be excited to buy and work with you.

TAKI "HOLY CRAP! I'D BUY THIS IN A NANOSECOND" MOORE

The $97,000 flight to Tokyo

EST. DATE	2025 (Low confidence) Crash 'a year ago'; Tokyo Boardroom event; Hutto died '2 years ago'.
EMAIL FORMAT	Personal story (dramatic) Lesson
TOPICS	Pricing Bleeding-neck problems Value
BIG IDEA	People pay whatever it takes to solve a bleeding-neck problem. Solve a $100K problem for $10K.
PROOF & ASSETS	Land Rover crash + bruise photos; 4 broken ribs, punctured lung; $97K USD medevac flight; the 'Crazy Asian Road Trip'.
YOUTUBE POTENTIAL
VIDEO FORMAT	Story-led long-form with photos; strong thumbnail
WORKING TITLE	I Paid $97,000 for a One-Way Flight to Tokyo
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"The doctor said if I flew, my lungs would collapse and I'd die. I had to be in Tokyo."

A year ago, I lost control of my 1974 Land Rover on a dirt track, and slammed it straight into a tree.

Don't know if you've seen a series 3 Landy, but those things don't have airbags.

Could have died. Came very close.

As I swung towards the tree, I wondered: "Did I live? Did I love? Did I even matter?"

OK, so that didn't happen 🤦.

I just watched myself skid side-on into a tree in slow motion.

Then the pain started.

Sat there shaking in shock for a minute or 2, struggling to get my seatbelt unstuck.

Managed to crawl out of the wreck and call for help. Only had 1 bar of reception and 2% battery.

Luckily one of my neighbours Elliot swung by in his VW Combi and took me to hospital.

Scary as hell.

'Doc' the Landy was ruined, and I broke 4 ribs and punctured my lung.

Hurt like you wouldn't believe for weeks.

The doctor said I would make a full recovery, but couldn't fly for 6 weeks, because the cabin pressure would collapse my lungs and I'd die.

Bad.

The problem I had was that I needed to get to Tokyo for a Boardroom event.

40 of my favourite clients (7-8 figures) were flying in, and I didn't wanna let them down.

Even more... My buddy Kevin Hutto and I had talked about taking Ethan and Wylie to Tokyo together.

Hutto died of Covid 2 years ago and I'd arranged with Dawn to bring 'Wyle-dog' on the trip.

Clients, friends and team offered to run the event without me. It would have been great, but I didn't wanna let Hutto down.

But no flying for 6 weeks was trying to stomp on my plans.

We looked at a ton of options — from stowing aboard a cargo ship for 22 days, to what we called the Crazy Asian Road Trip: train to Perth, cruise ship to Singapore, then overland through Malaysia, Thailand, Laos, across China and finally a 46 hour Chinese ferry to Japan.

Fun, but a bit mental.

None of them would get me there in time.

Desperate for a solution, we came across Dr Mani and a European Medevac team. You know, the guys who fly you home if you get banged up abroad.

They looked at my X-rays and scans, and told me it was doable.

I could fly business class with him and an ER nurse sitting next to me.

If my lungs collapsed, they'd drag me into the galley and bring me back.

Scary, and expensive.

$97k USD for them to fly in from the Netherlands, and escort me to Tokyo.

Expensive, but not as expensive as not being with Kiri-Maree and our clients in Tokyo, and not keeping the promise I'd made to Hutto.

So we did it.

Cost just under $100k USD for a 1-way flight.

What's the lesson?

PEOPLE WILL PAY WHATEVER IT TAKES TO SOLVE A BLEEDING NECK PROBLEM.

See, most coaches look the same, sound the same, promise the same... and get ignored the same.

Want a way to stand out and be worth more?

Solve a bleeding neck problem for a high quality buyer.

Find a $100k problem, and offer to solve it for $10k.

Or a $1M problem and solve it for $100k.

Don't get lost in the crowd.

Solve a high quality problem for a high quality buyer.

TAKI 'MADE IT TO TOKYO' MOORE

P.S. Kinda bummed that the Crazy Asian Roadtrip plan didn't work out. Woulda been one hell of a story.

We sold all our furniture

EST. DATE	Undated (— confidence) Evergreen client-of-client story.
EMAIL FORMAT	Borrowed story
TOPICS	Pricing Projecting affordability
BIG IDEA	Don't decide what someone else's 'whatever it takes' is.
PROOF & ASSETS	Pet-motel couple sold all their furniture; 5x'd in 18 months. Jay Abraham quote.
YOUTUBE POTENTIAL ●●●●●
VIDEO FORMAT	Short (60–90s) or a segment inside a pricing video
WORKING TITLE	They Sold Their Furniture to Pay Their Coach
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"He walked in for the first session. The house was empty."

Steve had just become a business coach.

His first client was a husband and wife who ran a pet motel in a country town.

He'd been out to meet them the week before... and they signed up on the spot, and wrote him a cheque.

His first client!

But when he drove back for their first coaching session... everything was gone.

The husband opened the door, smiled and invited him in.

Steve walked inside, looked around... then did a double-take.

There was no couch. No dining table. No furniture. Nothing.

Just a big empty space with blank walls, bare floorboards... and a couple of plastic milk crates where the dining table used to be.

"Are you guys renovating?"

The husband smiled.

"No."

Steve looked around the empty house again.

"So... where's all your furniture?"

"We sold it all to pay for your coaching."

Steve started backpedaling.

"I can't take your money. This is too much. I'll give you your money back. I don't want to put you under that kind of financial pressure."

The wife looked him straight in the eye.

"WHO ARE YOU TO TELL US WHAT OUR VERSION OF 'WHATEVER IT TAKES' SHOULD BE?"

Steve had no answer for that.

So he put his own fears aside and got to work.

18 months later, they'd 5X'd the business with Steve's help.

For years, they were one of his biggest success stories.

But it almost didn't happen.

Luckily, while Steve was looking at the furniture — they were looking at the future.

Where have you been looking?

Jay Abraham said:

"It's arrogant in the extreme to assume what the market will or won't pay for something."

TAKI 'WHATEVER IT TAKES' MOORE

Spilling the beans

EST. DATE	2025 (Low confidence) Written in Tokyo ('Yesterday'), probably the Boardroom trip.
EMAIL FORMAT	Field observation
TOPICS	Business model Free vs premium
BIG IDEA	Make the cup the lead magnet and sell the beans. Give information freely, charge for implementation.
PROOF & ASSETS	Koffee Mameya: lab coats, 6-pour ritual, 100+ bags of beans a day.
YOUTUBE POTENTIAL ●●●●●
VIDEO FORMAT	Travel vlog segment / Short. Best filmed on location.
WORKING TITLE	This Tokyo Café Sells Coffee Like a Genius
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"The coffee isn't the product."

Yesterday I went to the best pour-over coffee shop I've ever been to in the world.

It's called Koffee Mameya and it's in Tokyo.

The menu looks like this: light roasted coffees on the top, dark roasted down below, light mouthfeel, full mouthfeel. Simple, but incredible.

You line up outside for ages. Then, you get in and line up some more.

This is where the magic happens.

3 baristas in lab coats, all pouring very slowly, serve 1 customer or couple each.

They help you choose the perfect bean with their visual menu. They explain the origin and the flavour profile.

Then they dose exactly 15g of coffee, and slow-pour 210 grams of 92 degree water in 6 even pours until your cup of magic is juuuust right.

It's a ritual. An experience.

Very different from an Aussie cafe, which is based on speed.

And guess what happens next?

You fall in love with your perfect coffee, and buy a bag of your beans to take home.

The money is in the beans.

I asked one of the guys, and he said on an average day, they sell 100+ bags of beans.

Ridiculous for a cafe, right? High-end experience, education-based, premium price. Teaching for free, then selling the beans.

Most coffee shops focus on selling cups of coffee. What these guys have done is turn the cups into the lead magnet, and then sell the service (the education and the beans) as the premium product.

WHEN YOU GIVE FREELY OF YOUR INFORMATION, YOU EARN THE RIGHT TO CHARGE A PREMIUM FOR IMPLEMENTATION.

Look at your market. What is everyone else doing? How can you make that the free stuff, the giveaway, and then charge a premium for the valuable services?

Epic strategy for a higher-end buyer and to differentiate you from everyone else.

TAKI "THE MONEY IS IN THE BEANS" MOORE

PART 5

Clients

The 700-client machine.

25 Great TV. Terrible business model

26 David made me cry

27 I stole this from an airline

28 Dan Martell gave us 4 months

29 She took our phones

30 Take them

31 Homework is for losers

Great TV. Terrible business model

EST. DATE	2026 (Low confidence) Part of the Onramp/retention run (#25-28).
EMAIL FORMAT	Confession Plan (Onramp)
TOPICS	Retention Onboarding
BIG IDEA	Heroic saves make great TV and a terrible business model. Design the first 6 weeks.
PROOF & ASSETS	'Heroic Saves' named ritual; the 3 moves: seen, clear, win.

YOUTUBE POTENTIAL

VIDEO FORMAT	Talking-head story → framework
WORKING TITLE	Heroic Saves Are Killing Your Coaching Business
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"Taki... I just wanted to say thank you..." I knew what was coming."

Everyone talks about signing great clients. Nobody talks about losing them.

That's the hardest part of this business, and not because of the money.

I become mates with my clients. So when a great one leaves, it feels more like losing a mate than losing a customer.

I'm sure you've had the emails. They always start the same way.

"Taki... I just wanted to say thank you..."

And before I'd even finished reading the first sentence I already knew where it was going. That sinking feeling in the pit of my stomach. Every single time.

So I'd reply: "Totally understand, happy to take care of it. But before we do, would you jump on Zoom for half an hour so we can at least say goodbye properly?"

We'd get on the call, and I'd ask what we could've done better, then what was really going on in their business, and then we'd make a plan. I figured if this was the last time we ever spoke, at least they'd leave with something clear.

About half the time, they'd stay so I could help them implement it. Sometimes they'd even upgrade.

Here's the weird bit. I found those calls thrilling.

There was something about walking into a high-stakes mess, untangling it, helping someone find their feet, and watching them leave hopeful instead of defeated. It made me feel completely alive.

I'm not proud of it, but... yeah.

The team loved them too.

Somewhere along the way, those calls got a name: Heroic Saves.

"Another Heroic Save, Taki." Every time, it felt amazing.

HEROIC SAVES MAKE GREAT TV. BUT THEY'RE A TERRIBLE BUSINESS MODEL.

Because I got better at rescuing clients.

But I didn't get better at designing a business where clients didn't need rescuing.

As Black Belt grew, nothing got worse exactly. We just had more clients. The percentage stayed about the same. The calendar didn't.

One Heroic Save a week became 2. Then 4. I realised the whole thing only worked because I kept flogging myself.

So I asked myself a better question:

What if we could solve the problem instead of rescuing the person?

Ask a better question, and get a better answer.

Heroics are what you do when you leave the client experience to default.

Great businesses replace heroics with design.

So we stopped asking "how do we get better at Heroic Saves?" and started asking "how do we design the first 6 weeks so Heroic Saves become almost unnecessary?"

Every Heroic Save was the same 3 moves: make them feel seen, get them clear, get them a win.

I was just doing it 9 months too late.

So we took those exact 3 things, and instead of saving people with them at the end, we built them into the start.

From day 1, right through to the end of week 6.

We designed an Onramp that helped people feel seen, get crystal clear, and start winning immediately.

Because the best way to keep clients playing, staying and paying for years isn't to perform heroic rescues at the end when they want to leave. It's to drop-punt them so far on day 1, and connect them so deeply, that they never need rescuing in the first place.

That's what a great Onramp does.

TAKI "RECOVERING SUPERHERO" MOORE

David made me cry

EST. DATE	2026 (Low confidence) Onramp run.
EMAIL FORMAT	Confession Philosophy
TOPICS	Churn Onboarding
BIG IDEA	Churn starts at the beginning. Build a program so good people would feel stupid to leave.
PROOF & ASSETS	'If you still had every client who ever joined?' question; belong / believe / breakthrough; Hormozi contrast.
YOUTUBE POTENTIAL ●●●●●
VIDEO FORMAT	Emotional open → 3-part framework
WORKING TITLE	How Big Would Your Business Be If No One Ever Left?
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"A client asked me one question, and I cried."

4 years ago, a client asked me a question that absolutely destroyed me.

"HOW BIG WOULD YOUR BUSINESS BE TODAY IF YOU STILL HAD EVERY CLIENT WHO'D EVER JOINED?"

I cried.

Every month we'd celebrate another record sales month, and every month I'd have this nagging feeling that something underneath the business wasn't right.

The coaching worked.

The offer was good.

People joined genuinely excited.

But somewhere between buying and getting momentum, too many of them got overwhelmed. They stalled. And they left.

Like most coaches, I tried to outmarket a delivery problem.

More leads.

Better copy.

Stronger offers.

More sales.

Everyone's read Hormozi's purple book, and is busy trying to make an offer so good people would feel stupid saying no.

Almost nobody's obsessed with making a program so good people would feel stupid to leave.

It took me years to realise we'd been solving the wrong problem.

Because it was never a marketing problem.

It was an onboarding problem.

Here's the shift that changed everything for us:

Churn doesn't happen at the end of a client's journey.

It starts right at the beginning.

You don't fix retention by heroically rescuing people when they're halfway out the door.

You fix it by getting them so much momentum in those first 6 weeks that leaving never even enters the conversation.

So we stopped designing onboarding around information.

We started designing it around the 3 outcomes of a great onramp:

Get them to belong.

Get them to believe.

And get them a breakthrough.

Fast.

Now it's common for our clients to earn enough to pay for a full year in the program before they've even attended their Kickoff Call.

Our new onboarding system gets them to win fast and want to stay for years.

TAKI "I ALREADY PAID THE STUPID TAX" MOORE

I stole this from an airline

EST. DATE

2026 (Low confidence)
Onramp run; '45 new clients... first Tuesday of every month'.

EMAIL FORMAT

Borrowed case study (history)

Framework

TOPICS

Onboarding

Customer journey

Moments of Truth

BIG IDEA

Map the journey, find the Moments of Truth, T-bar each one. 6 of 9 happen in the first 6 weeks.

PROOF & ASSETS

SAS: $17M loss → $54M profit; Moments of Truth + T-bar cards; 45 clients onboarded in 2 hours.

YOUTUBE POTENTIAL

.....

VIDEO FORMAT

History story + brown-paper framework (10-12 min)

WORKING TITLE

I Stole This From an Airline, and It Fixed Our Churn

COLD-OPEN HOOK

"In 1981 a 39-year-old fixed an airline with 2 sheets of paper."

In 1981, while every airline was bleeding cash, a cocky 39-year-old called Jan Carlzon fixed an airline with 2 sheets of paper and a pencil.

Scandinavian Air Systems (SAS) had been profitable for 17 years, then lost money 2 years in a row.

That’s when they brought in Jan as the youngest airline CEO in the world.

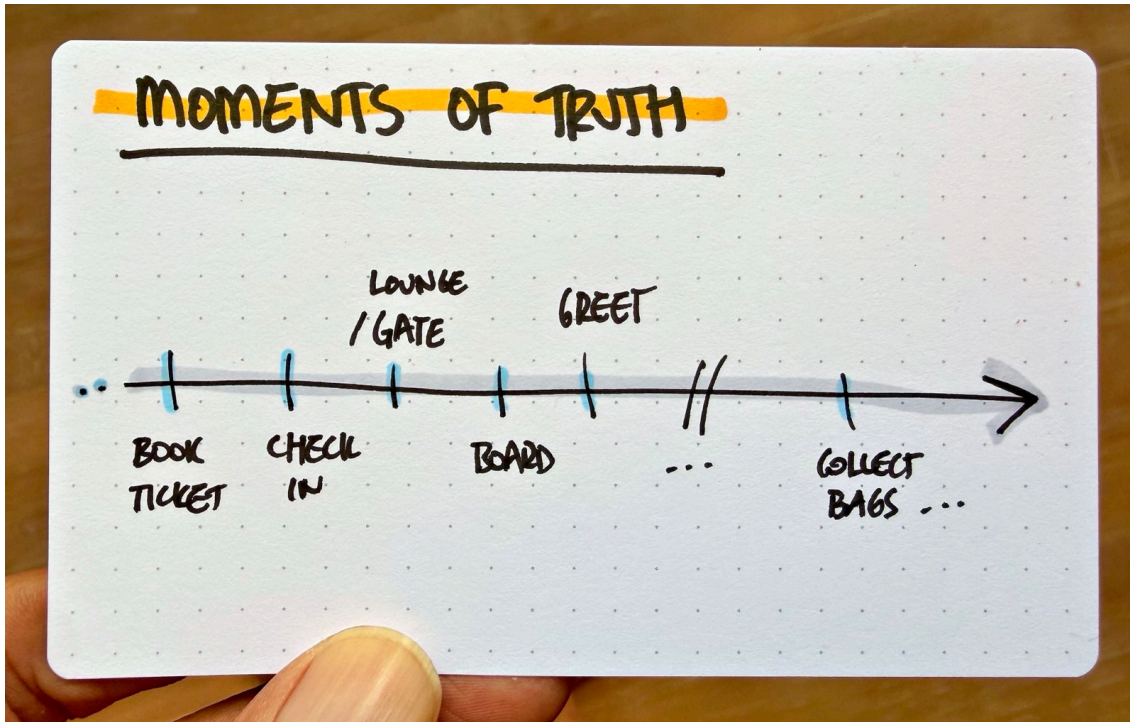

Everyone thought they needed to cut costs. Jan thought they needed to upgrade their customers and the customer experience.

“Our asset isn’t our planes, it’s happy customers. Especially business travellers, because they pay full fare, and they fly more.”

So instead of trying to build a better airline, he used 2 sheets of paper to build a better experience for the customers he wanted more of.

The first sheet of paper was simple.

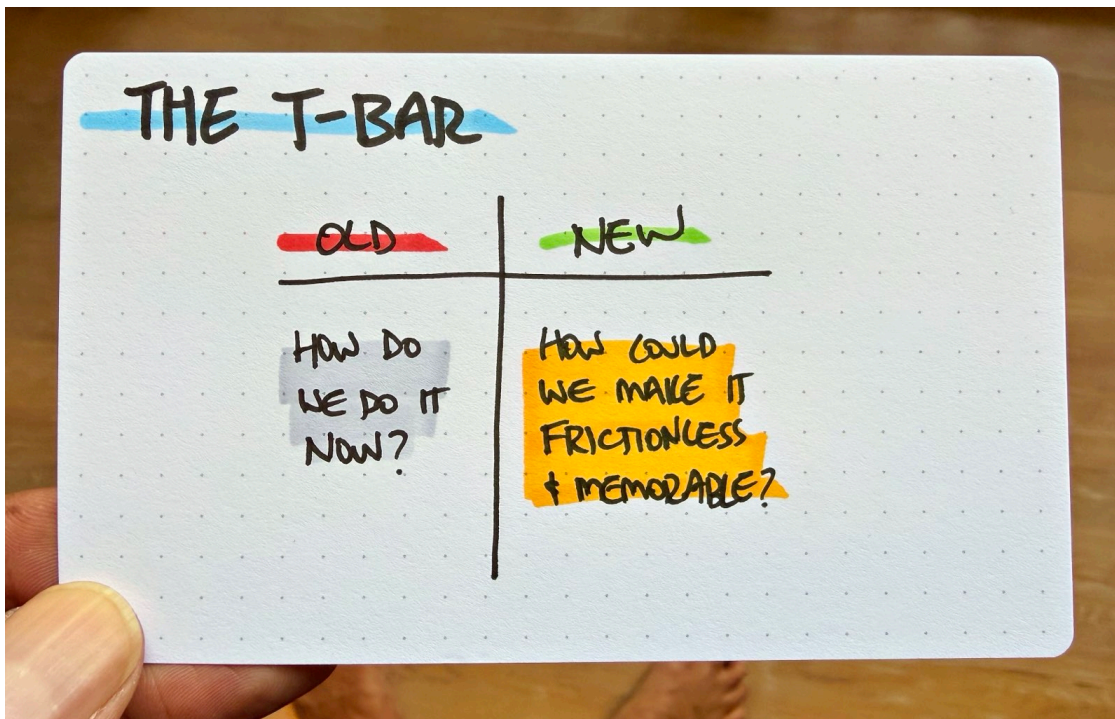

His team mapped the entire customer journey. Booking a ticket, checking in, boarding, being greeted by the crew, collecting your luggage. Every interaction from beginning to end.

Especially the moments where customers silently decide if they want to keep flying with you or not.

Jan called them Moments of Truth.

Then they grabbed the second sheet. For every Moment of Truth, they drew a T-Bar. A simple sheet with a line down the middle. On the left: how do we do this today? On the right: how could we make this more frictionless and more memorable?

They brainstormed, picked the best ideas, and made them the standard way SAS operated.

That was it.

Over the next 12 months, the rest of the industry lost more than $2 billion.

But Jan and his 2 sheets of paper took SAS from a $17 million loss to a $54 million profit in a year.

It was simple and it was genius.

So naturally, I stole it.

When I wanted to increase lifetime value, we mapped out the client's journey.

Turns out every coaching client goes through 9 Moments of Truth. Moments where they quietly decide whether they made the right call, whether they trust you, whether they belong, whether they're going to stay.

Here's the interesting part:

6 of those 9 Moments of Truth happen in the first 6 weeks, when the relationship is still new and vulnerable, and when getting them wrong undoes every bit of the marketing and sales you just did to win them.

Most coaches don't even know what the 6 moments are.

So your clients are making decisions about you that you're blind to.

Instead of using the 6 moments to make your clients win faster and stay longer.

You're leaving it to chance.

So they don't.

Because those 6 moments decide whether your clients feel like they made the right decision or start getting wobbly.

they've found their tribe or wonder if they've walked into the wrong room.

they build momentum or lose their nerve.

they stay long enough for your coaching to actually work, or leave before it ever gets the chance.

So we did exactly what Jan did.

Mapped the journey, found the 6 Moments of Truth, then deliberately designed every one. Small upgrades, done intentionally, done every time.

The hard work was identifying them, and designing them.

But now they're done, it's a system that just works.

In Black Belt, 45 new clients start together on the first Tuesday of every month. Every one of them moves through those same 6 choreographed moments.

They win faster. They stay longer.

And onboarding all 45 takes me 2 hours. Total.

Not because onboarding is easy. Because once you've designed the experience, running the system is.

Most coaches think onboarding starts with the welcome email. It doesn't. It starts the moment someone says yes, and from that second on, they're quietly asking themselves one question:

DID I JUST MAKE A BRILLIANT DECISION, OR AN EXPENSIVE MISTAKE?

You can leave that moment to chance. Or you can design it.

TAKI 'MOMENTS OF TRUTH' MOORE

Dan Martell gave us 4 months

EST. DATE	2026 (Low confidence) '5 years ago, Dan Martell showed me the graph'.
EMAIL FORMAT	Case study (own business) Framework (maths)
TOPICS	Churn ceiling Growth Onboarding
BIG IDEA	Ceiling = new clients per month ÷ monthly churn. The fastest way back to growth is fixing onboarding.
PROOF & ASSETS	Churn-ceiling formula; 2 growth-curve cards ('I was here' / 'We are here'); $180K spent getting it right; 4x.
YOUTUBE POTENTIAL
VIDEO FORMAT	Whiteboard maths + story. Possible Dan Martell collab/mention.
WORKING TITLE	The Churn Ceiling: The Math That Predicts When Your Business Flatlines
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"Dan Martell gave us 4 months. That was 5 years ago."

5 years ago, Dan Martell showed me the graph.

4 months.

According to the maths, that's how long we had before our business flatlined.

I don't remember the numbers, but I remember feeling sick to the pit of my stomach.

Dan was teaching my Boardroom crew about one of the most important metrics in a mature coaching business: The Churn Ceiling.

It predicts where your growth will slow, stall and eventually stop. Not because you stop selling, but because the number of clients leaving every month slowly catches the number joining.

The maths tells you the exact month you'll cap out, how many clients you'll have, and how much monthly revenue you'll stall at.

The maths is 1 division. Even I can do it.

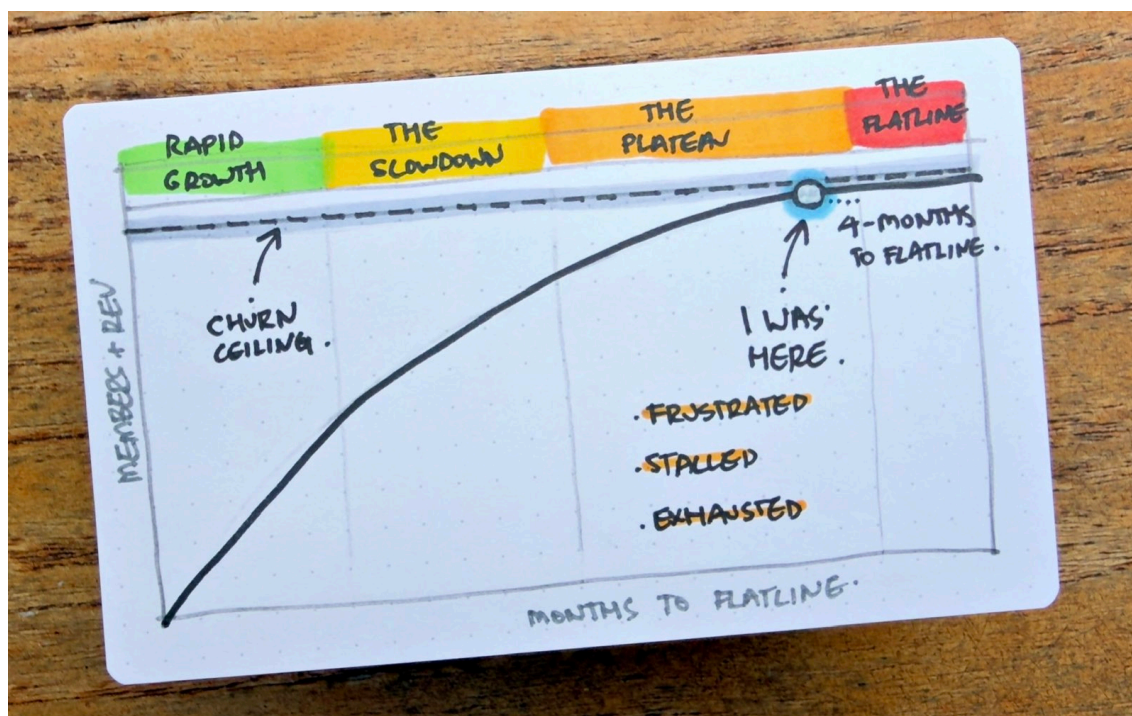

Your ceiling = new clients per month ÷ monthly churn rate.

Onboarding 10 clients a month at 8% churn? You cap out at 125 clients.

The date you flatline is already decided, and it's getting closer every day.

I'm not a numbers guy. Spreadsheets scare me (I'm more Crayola than pivot table).

But I can do graphs.

Your coaching business is in one of these 4 places:

Rapid Growth

The Slowdown

The Plateau, or

The Flatline.

If you're still in Rapid Growth, awesome. This will help you stay there longer.

If you're in The Slowdown, you can already see the writing on the wall.

And if you're on The Plateau or The Flatline, you've already hit it.

At the time, we were on The Plateau, 4 months from flatlining.

I knew growth had become slower and harder, but now I could see why: we were bringing in new clients, but almost as many were quietly leaving out the back door.

Our Net New Clients were basically zero.

And it's brutal, because you're working harder than ever, your team's working harder than ever, you're spending more than ever, and at the end of the month the bloody graph barely moves.

So what did I do? What almost everyone does.

I tried to out-market a churn problem.

More ads. More marketing. More salespeople. It felt like running on a treadmill with the incline cranked. Working my arse off, getting nowhere.

Here's the truth: you can out-market a churn problem. It's just really, really expensive.

When you're small, an 8% monthly churn rate barely registers. 8% of 13 clients is basically nobody. But at 100 clients, that's 8 new people every month just to stand still. At 200, it's 16. Near the churn ceiling, every new client you onboard simply replaces somebody who left.

You're paying full acquisition price just to tread water.

THAT'S WHY THE FASTEST WAY BACK INTO RAPID GROWTH ISN'T MORE MARKETING.

YAY. IT'S FIXING ONBOARDING.

It sounds weird, but when we engineered the first 6 weeks of the client journey, we didn't just reduce early churn.

Our 6-month churn dropped. Our 12-month churn dropped. And our 18-month churn dropped.

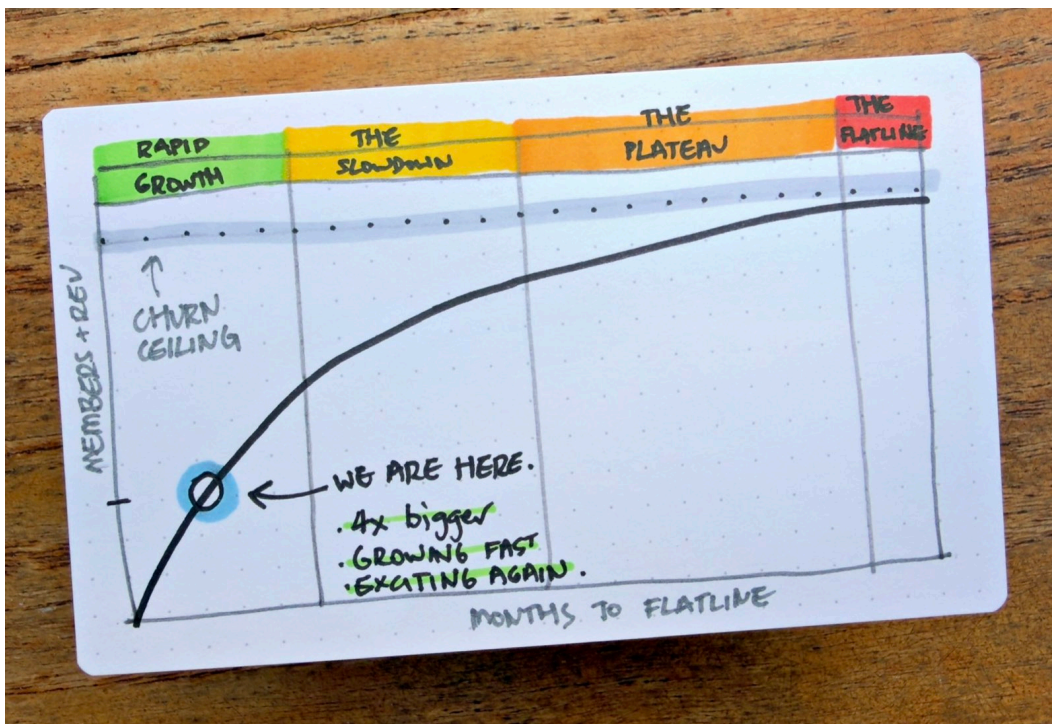

By fixing the first few weeks, people started staying for years.

It took us a few years and about $180,000 in consultants and trial and error to try to get it right. Eventually, we got it dialled in.

Dan gave us 4 months. That was 5 years ago.

We never hit the churn ceiling.

We're not on The Plateau anymore. We're back in Rapid Growth.

We've 4x'd the number of new clients, but we're still growing like a rocket.

The business is exciting again. It feels amazing.

And we've got another 5 years before we hit the churn ceiling (and plenty of tricks up our sleeve to punt it way out again when we need to).

So if you've slipped into The Slowdown, The Plateau or The Flatline, the fastest way back isn't another marketing campaign. It's fixing onboarding.

TAKI 'RAPID GROWTH IS BETTER' MOORE

She took our phones

EST. DATE

2026 (Low confidence)
Experience-design theme (Onramp run).

EMAIL FORMAT

Field observation

Plan

TOPICS

Client experience

Word of mouth

BIG IDEA

Most businesses create Instagram Stories. Great ones create stories people retell.

PROOF & ASSETS

4 photos: hidden entrance, phone lockbox, tallow candle, steak presentation.

YOUTUBE POTENTIAL

VIDEO FORMAT

Vlog-style experience walkthrough / Short

WORKING TITLE

This Restaurant Took Our Phones (Steal This for Your Business)

COLD-OPEN HOOK

"Google Maps led us to a fire exit."

2 nights ago, after Laura’s event, 6 of us headed to Bistecca for dinner.

Google Maps led us into a dark Sydney laneway and confidently announced, "You’ve arrived."

The only problem was... there wasn’t a restaurant.

There was a fire exit.

We stood there for a second wondering whether Google had finally lost the plot. I completely missed the sign. There was nothing obvious to suggest one of Sydney's best restaurants was hiding behind that door.

We opened it anyway.

Downstairs was another world. Dimly lit. Warm. Quiet. More speakeasy than steakhouse. It felt like we’d been let in on a secret.

Once everyone had gathered, the maître d' showed us to our table. Before we'd even opened the menu, she returned carrying a beautiful wooden box with a brass key attached.

"Phones, please."

She smiled as she explained that they don't believe phones belong in the dining room. They'd rather people talked to each other.

So all 6 phones went into the box.

She locked it.

Then she handed the key to Laura.

After that, nobody at the table had even thought about their phone.

A couple of minutes later she came back and lit the candles.

Except they weren't candles.

They were made from beef tallow with rosemary and anchovy.

As they slowly melted, freshly baked sourdough arrived from the kitchen. The waiter suggested we drag the bread through the melted tallow.

It sounds ridiculous.

It was ridiculously delicious.

After we'd ordered our sides, the conversation turned to the steak. They recommend about 300 to 400 grams per person, including the bone, so the 6 of us settled on 2 kilos.

A little later the waiter returned carrying the raw cuts on brown paper with their weights handwritten in Sharpie. Before they ever saw the grill, he walked us through each cut, where it came from, why they'd chosen it and even the order we should eat it once it was cooked.

I'd never been introduced to my steak before!

None of this was random.

I could almost picture someone walking through the entire evening, one touchpoint at a time, asking:

"How could we make this moment just a little more memorable?"

The hidden entrance.

The phone box.

The tallow candle.

The sourdough.

The steak.

None of those moments, on their own, were extraordinary.

Together, they became a story.

Then I realised why.

MOST RESTAURANTS ARE TRYING TO CREATE INSTAGRAM STORIES.

BISTECCA CREATES STORIES.

Stories you tell your mates over coffee the next morning.

Stories you tell your clients over dinner the following night.

Stories that spread by word of mouth instead of Wi-Fi.

Since 2 nights ago, I've already told 6 friends about Bistecca.

You're number 7.

Walking out, I could still taste all the yum in my mouth.

But this morning, I wasn't thinking about the steak or the candles.

I was thinking about all the little moments we usually leave to chance because we're busy trying to improve the marketing.

Maybe the bigger opportunity is to improve the experience.

Walk through your business from beginning to end.

From your first message.

Your welcome email.

Your offer doc or sales call.

Every zoom.

Every workshop.

Every client interaction is an opportunity to create a story worth telling.

Which touchpoints deserve a little more theatre?

TAKI 'STORIES' MOORE

Take them

EST. DATE	Early 2026 (Low confidence) 'This year I'm excited...'; Janu Tokyo 'a few weeks ago'.
EMAIL FORMAT	Micro-observation
TOPICS	Client experience Coaching style
BIG IDEA	Don't tell and point. Go with people.
PROOF & ASSETS	Janu Tokyo concierge story. Very short email.

YOUTUBE POTENTIAL ●●●●●

VIDEO FORMAT	Short (≤45s)
WORKING TITLE	Don't Tell and Point
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"I asked where the gym was. She didn't tell me."

You can tell a lot about a company by what they do when you ask for help.

At most hotels, when you ask where the restaurant (or gym) is, they tell you.

And point.

Tell. And Point.

Mostly helpful, unless you have the memory of a goldfish like me.

Kiri-Maree and I stayed at an uber cool hotel called Janu Tokyo a few weeks ago.

When I asked where the gym was, they didn't tell me. Or point.

The woman came around the counter, and said

"Let me show you"

Then she escorted me around the corner, down a corridor and to the gym.

On the way, she asked what I was into.

And when we got there, she introduced me to the gym manager and asked him to give me a tour.

She didn't tell or point. She went with me.

It was the perfect answer to "excuse me, can you tell me where the gym is?"

AS COACHES, I THINK WE TELL AND POINT TOO MUCH. AND DON'T GO WITH PEOPLE ENOUGH.

This year, I'm excited about telling and pointing a little less, and going with people more.

TAKI 'LET ME SHOW YOU' MOORE

Homework is for losers

EST. DATE	Undated (— confidence) Evergreen family story.
EMAIL FORMAT	Family story (comedy)	Philosophy
TOPICS	Delivery	Workshops	Do it live
BIG IDEA	Bad coaches give homework. Good coaches do the work live.
PROOF & ASSETS	Aroha repeating Dad's line to her teacher; call from the principal.

YOUTUBE POTENTIAL ●●●●●

VIDEO FORMAT	Story Short + mid-length delivery philosophy video
WORKING TITLE	Homework Is for Losers (Why Bad Coaches Give Homework)
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"My daughter told her teacher exactly what I'd said. I got a call from the principal."

When Aroha started school, the week's homework was due every Friday.

One Thursday night, I told her it was bedtime, and she started freaking out.

"But dad — I haven't done my homework yet!"

I told her it was late, and that I could wake her up early to do it in the morning.

She went from freaked out to panicking.

"No. I won't finish it, and I'll get in trouble!"

I tried every dad trick in the book, but none of them worked.

Finally, exasperated I said:

"Look Bub. They've got you for 8 hours a day. If they can't get the work done in 8 hours, why should that be your fault?"

That seemed to work, until the next day at school.

The teacher called everyone's name to collect attendance, and homework.

It was in alphabetical order, so Aroha was up first.

"Aroha?"

She stood up. "Yes, miss?"

"Did you do your homework?"

"No miss", and sat down.

"Aroha?" Stands up again. "Yes, miss?"

"Why didn't you do your homework?"

"My dad says you've got me for 8 hours a day. If you can't get the work done in 8 hours, why should that be my problem?"

Aroha sat down proud in the knowledge that she'd given the right answer!

The teacher was speechless.

I got a call from the principal, and had some 'splaining to do.

But I stand by my statement:

BAD COACHES GIVE HOMEWORK. GOOD COACHES DO THE WORK LIVE.

If you're on a workshop with me, I'm not gonna fill you up with inspiration and excitement, only to leave you 90 minutes later with a big fat todo list.

You are already busy. You don't need me (or anyone else) to take up an hour of your life, and load you up with more things to do.

More stuff, and an hour less available time to do it. Who came up with that plan?

No sir. We're gonna do the work live on the call. Side by side.

You'll leave with the stuff done. Emails written. Videos shot. Ads done.

Whatever the topic is, we're gonna take it from idea to done, live on the call.

Your clients should finish a session with you, and be able to run home like a kid in kindergarten, waving their painting.

"Mummy! Mummy! Look what I made!"

Most 'coaches' give people information and homework.

Teach them what they need in the first 10-15 mins, and use the rest of the time to help them get it done.

TAKI "DO IT LIVE" MOORE

PART 6

Team

Small on purpose.

32 Burning down a $1M business

33 Duct tape & scissors

34 Founder v CEO

35 The composer

36 Gizzards, regret, and why you need to walk out sooner

37 This story gets worse every paragraph

38 A 2-screen company?

Burning down a $1M business

EST. DATE	2025-26 (Low confidence) '12 months ago this week, she burnt it all down'.
EMAIL FORMAT	Client case study
TOPICS	Simplification Business model Team size
BIG IDEA	Adopt, then adapt. A business that doesn't fit you can be burned down and rebuilt bigger.
PROOF & ASSETS	Steph: $4K/mo → $1M in 12 months; 120 clients, 80 re-signed for 12 months; team 13 → 4; $2.4M FY; 20 hrs/wk.
YOUTUBE POTENTIAL ●●●●●
VIDEO FORMAT	Case-study breakdown, ideally with a Steph interview
WORKING TITLE	She Burned Down Her $1M Business. Now It Makes $2.4M.
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"She lied on her application to get in."
HEADS-UP	Get Steph's OK before naming her on YouTube.

This is for you if you've ever built a big business. One that others admire. Maybe even one you've taught others to model.

And felt trapped.

Steph lied on her application to get into Black Belt 🤡.

She joined us doing $4k a month, and grew to a million dollars a year, in 12 months.

She ADOPTED my model, but she hadn't ADAPTED yet.

She copied the business model that was perfect for me. Not for her.

I've said it before: Copying someone else's business model is like wearing someone else's undies. Exciting at first, then a bit awkward and chafey.

She implemented EVERYTHING she'd seen us do or teach, and tons of things that other clients were doing too. Whether it was right for her or not.

And after a year, her business was at a million dollars, but it didn't feel like her.

Because she was trying to do everything, she'd built a big team that felt heavy instead of liberating.

$1M is great revenue, but the team size meant profit was nowhere near where she wanted it to be.

Her coaches were working with her clients, but not to the same standard and she wasn't proud of it.

Lots of 1:1 sessions lead to long weeks, long hours, and the stress!

Everyone looked up to her, but she wasn't happy.

She knew deep down that it wasn't her, and it wasn't sustainable.

She wanted to change, but she was stuck in her own success, and changing something that's 'working' is scary.

She had 120 clients, and losing them was scary.

But she's a badass, so 12 months ago this week, she burnt it all down.

Told her team she was making changes, and let them go.

Told her clients she was letting them out of the contracts, and starting a new program at the same monthly price, but for double the length.

If they wanted to leave, they could. If they wanted to stay, they'd sign a new 12-month agreement.

She knew that if 30 stayed, she'd be ok.

Ballsy.

Here's what happened:

80 of the existing clients stayed with her, and signed up for 12 months in the new offer.

Massive relief!

She now works no more than 20 hours a week (10 hours on delivery, and 10 marketing).

At 2pm everyday, she and her hubby shut the laptop, and jump in the hot tub.

Instead of a bloated team of 13, now she has a lean squad of 4.

The business finished the financial year at $2.4M.

And the margins are insane.

And instead of slogging her guts out, dreaming about taking trips together, she deliberately made Adventure one of her top 5 values, and took 6 weeks off travelling.

If you've built something big that doesn't feel right anymore, it's normal and part of the path. Even I went through it.

I've been there, and I felt trapped.

I WAS SO FOCUSED ON WHAT I'D BE GIVING UP THAT I ALMOST FORGOT TO LOOK AT WHAT I'D ALREADY GIVEN UP.

Fun. Freedom. Pride.

And a business that grows almost effortlessly because it's simple and aligned.

Like Steph, I made a bunch of decisions that were hard, and rebuilt a business the way I wanted (not the way the gurus say we're supposed to).

If this message speaks to you, I want you to know:

1. Your worst fears won't happen.
2. The moment you make the decision, you'll feel 5 years younger.
3. There's a way to build a business where as it gets bigger, your life gets better.

TAKI 'BURN IT DOWN' MOORE

Duct tape & scissors

EST. DATE	2025-26 (Low confidence) Business went '$8M a year, to 20'.
EMAIL FORMAT	☒ Anonymised case ☒ Philosophy ☒ Own results
TOPICS	☒ Complexity ☒ Cutting ☒ Scale
BIG IDEA	The secret to scale is scissors. Cut, don't add.
PROOF & ASSETS	Team 36 → 8; ads $60K → $6K/mo; $8M → $20M; 90-day turnaround.
YOUTUBE POTENTIAL
VIDEO FORMAT	Essay + own-business numbers; thumbnail: scissors / duct tape
WORKING TITLE	The Secret to Scale Is Scissors
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"From the outside, his business looked incredible. Behind the scenes, he was drowning."

He was drowning, with a forced smile on his face.

From the outside, his business looked incredible. Slick marketing, rooftop parties at his events and socials full of tweetable soundbites... like an instagram fortune cookie.

He was the poster boy of "successful coach, crushing life and business".

Only it was a lie.

Behind the scenes, he was drowning.

Big office to pay for, filled with an expensive management team. Coaches and client success people to deliver on all the promises his marketing made. Salespeople who needed to be fed. Fancy events in downtown hotspots.

Sales was complaining they were getting price and value objections, so the marketing team made bigger and bigger promises to keep the volume going.

Temporary relief.

The bottleneck just moved from sales to delivery.

And his margins started getting swallowed up by a new done-for-you department spun up too quickly to deliver on the BIGGER! FASTER! EASIER! promises he had to keep making.

Growth had stalled. Margins were razor thin. And churn was eating him alive.

The hardest part was having to fake it on camera: acting like he had it all figured out, just so the sales wheels wouldn't fall off.

"One day I want to scale it to the moon... the next day I want to fire everyone, shut it down and walk away."

In 7 & 8-figure coaching businesses, this is incredibly common.

The answer to every problem looks like more.

New offers. New team. New programs. New marketing strategies.

Adding things feels so easy and light.

But maintaining all the things you've added is heavy.

Eventually, the weight becomes unsustainable.

Every solution added more complexity, more costs, and more problems.

That's how the whole thing gets built: more offers, more team, more programs, more departments, more promises, all duct-taped together, layer after layer, until one day you realise you're the one sitting duct-taped in the middle of it all like a hostage in your own business.

That's when 7 & 8 figure coaches come to me.

There is zero judgement. I've been there.

I built a business that looked great from the outside, and felt like a prison on the inside.

I'd bought back my time so much that I didn't even know what my job was anymore, and built myself a business I'd grown to hate.

It took courage to admit that I'd built something that looked good to other people, but felt like a prison to me.

Once I'd said it out loud, it only took 90 days to turn it into what I actually wanted.

Lighter. Leaner. More nimble.

The team went from 36 → 8.

Adspend went from $60k a month → $6k.

Obviously we were way more profitable, but the craziest thing happened:

When I stopped caring what it looked like to others, and just built it to feel good to me, the business went from $8M a year, to 20.

Complexity & duct tape got you into this mess.

You don't need to add more.

You need to cut.

THE SECRET TO SCALE IS SCISSORS.

Founder v CEO

EST. DATE	Undated (— confidence) Evergreen.
EMAIL FORMAT	Philosophy (short)
TOPICS	Founder role Maker vs manager
BIG IDEA	You can hire a CEO; you can't hire a founder. Get back in the maker's seat.
PROOF & ASSETS	Clean founder-vs-CEO contrast list.
YOUTUBE POTENTIAL ●●●●●
VIDEO FORMAT	Short, or a segment in a 'founder mode' video with #44
WORKING TITLE	You Hired Yourself Into the Wrong Job
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"There are 2 roles in your business, and you're in the wrong one."

There are 2 roles in every 7 or 8 figure coaching business:

Founder.

And CEO.

And you're in the wrong one.

The founder is a maker.

The CEO is a manager.

One creates. The other maintains.

One injects risk. The other reduces it.

One builds the thing that doesn't exist yet.

The other protects what already does.

You started the business, so technically, you're the founder.

But if your calendar is full of team meetings, ops, cash flow, and people management, you're not the founder.

You're the manager.

Most coaching businesses stall for one reason:

The founder goes missing.

And when the founder goes missing, so does the momentum, the magic, and the money.

YOU CAN HIRE A CEO.

BUT YOU CAN'T HIRE A FOUNDER.

And if you're not doing the founder's job, no one is.

When I see coaches doing 7 or 8 figures getting stuck, it's almost always because they've accidentally become the CEO.

They're managing, not making.

Maintaining, not creating.

And they're miserable.

Your business doesn't need a better plan.

It needs you back in the right seat.

ONE HOUR OF YOU IN FOUNDER MODE WILL PAY FOR A WEEK OF OPS. TAKI 'FOUNDER' MOORE

The composer

EST. DATE	2025 (Low confidence) Boardroom Blade ceremony.
EMAIL FORMAT	☒ Tribute ☒ Event recap
TOPICS	☐ Founder evolution ☐ Leverage
BIG IDEA	Violinist → conductor → composer. Build something that runs without you.
PROOF & ASSETS	Samurai-sword award; Tony: 13 years, $20M business.

YOUTUBE POTENTIAL	● ● ● ● ●
VIDEO FORMAT	Much stronger with a Tony interview; otherwise a Short
WORKING TITLE	Violinist, Conductor, Composer: The 3 Stages of a Founder
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"My business runs better without me."

I held the samurai sword in both hands.

The room went still.

Then I handed the Boardroom Blade to one of the best men I know: Tony.

It's not a popularity prize.

It's not given by me.

It's earned, voted by peers every 4 months, for results and contribution.

As Tony bowed to accept it, he said something that stuck:

"My business runs better without me."

I used to be the guy doing everything.

First chair. Playing lead. Solo after solo.

Then I built a team and became the conductor.

Still central. Still calling the shots.

But the business kept growing.

And one day, it didn't need me like it used to.

That's where most coaches cling harder. Not Tony.

"I'M NOT THE VIOLINIST. NOT THE CONDUCTOR. I'M THE COMPOSER."

That line landed.

Most coaches hit a wall when they're no longer needed day-to-day.

They feel lost. So they dive back in.

Fix. Fire. Lead. Do.

And accidentally hold the business back.

Tony didn't do that.

He bought back his time, and found a better role.

One with more impact.

More leverage.

More meaning.

His team were running a live client event in Melbourne at the same time.

Crushing it, without him.

And he was with us.

In Boardroom.

With his peers.

He's built something that works without him.

And chose to be with the people who get that kind of game.

Well played, Tony.

13 years of showing up.

$20M coaching biz.

Still humble. Still generous. Still playing for the team.

I'm proud to call you a mate.

TAKI "BLADE" MOORE

Gizzards, regret, and why you need to walk out sooner

EST. DATE	2024 (Medium confidence) 'I did that all through 2023'.
EMAIL FORMAT	Travel story (comedy) Lesson
TOPICS	Tolerations Cutting
BIG IDEA	Stop chewing the gizzards. You set the menu in your business.
PROOF & ASSETS	Tokyo: 9 people, baby, wheelchair, 7 restaurant rejections.

YOUTUBE POTENTIAL

VIDEO FORMAT

WORKING TITLE

COLD-OPEN HOOK

Story video / Short

Stop Eating the Gizzards in Your Business

"I don't eat anything that used to have a job."

There's a moment in every coach's life when they know: this ain't it.

Mine hit me in a Tokyo restaurant, with chicken gizzards on a stick and a social contract I should've broken.

Travelling in Japan is wild.

Travelling with 9 people, including a baby and a wheelchair, is chaos.

Add in a stack of dietary requirements and you've got yourself a mobile circus.

We're wandering through Ebisu in Tokyo, starving.

7 restaurants say no.

Finally, we find a place that might work: skewers, rice, a bit of variety. Feels promising.

The host nods, smiles, invites us up.

We leave the stroller and wheelchair downstairs.

Shoes off. Weird slippers on.

Climb the stairs. Sit on the floor.

He brings us water. Takes our drink orders.

We're in.

We sip our water.

(BIG MISTAKE)

Then the girls check the menu.

No pork. No beef.

Every skewer? Weird.

Chicken liver, chicken hearts... chicken gizzards.

The girls look at each other, look at us, and bounce.

No drama. Just "nope".

Smart.

The adults? We stay.

Because we'd already drank some of the water. Because we felt bad.

Because we didn't want to be rude.

That's the moment I knew I'd messed up.

I don't eat gizzards.

I don't eat livers. Or hearts.

I don't eat anything that used to have a job.

But that's what we do in business.

We stay too long.

With broken offers.

With misfit clients.

With flaky team members.

With outdated delivery.

With that part of your program you secretly hate.

We keep chewing on gizzards we should've spat out months ago.

I did that all through 2023.

Tolerated things I knew weren't right.

For weeks. Months. Years, in some cases.

Until I didn't.

I got sick of it.

And I changed things.

In a restaurant, you can just walk out.

In your business? You stay.

But that doesn't mean the gizzards have to.

You don't need to burn it all down.

You just need the bullshit to leave.

That broken offer?

That underperforming team member?

That delivery piece you dread?

They can go.

BECAUSE IT'S YOUR BUSINESS, AND YOU SET THE MENU.

I don't eat gizzards.

I also don't eat bullshit in my business anymore.

Neither should you.

TAKI "NO MORE GIZZARDS" MOORE

This story gets worse every paragraph

EST. DATE	Mid 2026 (Medium confidence) Taki's '50th birthday is coming up'; uses Claude; 10 days after a Tokyo trip.
EMAIL FORMAT	Personal story (escalating comedy)Philosophy (AI era)
TOPICS	AIJudgmentTeam & hiring
BIG IDEA	When execution gets cheap, bad judgment gets very expensive.
PROOF & ASSETS	$55K AUD/night Four Seasons penthouse; 32M KRW answer; no cancellation; Amex fraud block; ended up spending $6K.
YOUTUBE POTENTIAL
VIDEO FORMAT	Story-led long-form (highest viral potential in the archive)
WORKING TITLE	My Assistant Accidentally Booked a $220,000 Hotel
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"For about 2 hours, I thought my marriage might be over."
HEADS-UP	Keep the assistant anonymous. Aim the lesson at the system, not the person.

Last week my assistant accidentally booked a $220,000 boys' trip to Korea.

(AND FOR ABOUT 2 HOURS, I THOUGHT MY MARRIAGE MIGHT BE OVER.)

Here's how it all went down:

A couple of mates and I decided, very last minute, to fly to Korea for 4 nights.

We were all randomly free the same week.

My 50th birthday is coming up.

So we did the responsible midlife thing and booked international flights with almost no plan.

Flights were easy.

Accommodation was the only thing left.

One of the boys said:

"Hey, we don't have assistants. Do you think yours could help sort out options?"

I said yes.

But also explained that my assistant is not exactly the Navy SEAL Team 6 of executive support.

More like if you ordered operational excellence from Temu.

Still.

We didn't need anything fancy.

It was a boys' trip.

We would have been perfectly happy in an Airbnb, sleeping on couches, eating Korean BBQ, and pretending our backs didn't hurt.

One of the boys helpfully opened Claude and asked it for Seoul accommodation ideas.

And Claude kinda crushed it.

It gave:

- neighbourhood recommendations
- hotel contacts
- fallback options
- direct booking strategies
- different price points
- context for each option

A genuinely thoughtful little accommodation playbook.

There were sensible apartments.

Suite hotels.

Short-term rental agencies.

Fallback options if the 3-bedroom hunt stalled.

And one extremely spicy option:

Four Seasons Seoul Presidential Three-Bedroom Penthouse.

But it was just one option in a list.

So I copied the whole Claude response, sent it to my assistant, and turned my phone off.

A couple of hours later, I turned my phone back on.

Message from my assistant:

"Accommodation booked."

I told the boys:

"Looks like accommodation is booked."

One of them immediately replied:

"Are we in a hostel?"

Fair question.

I checked.

Nope.

We were in option 2.

The Four Seasons Presidential Penthouse.

413 square metres.

29th floor.

Media room.

Private spa.

The kind of place you book when you're travelling with Drake.

Not 3 middle-aged men who mainly wanted grilled meat and a nap.

One of the boys immediately started panicking.

"Wait... she didn't come back with options?"

Nope.

"She just booked it?"

Yep.

Then came the next message:

"I probably should have mentioned I'm balling like a bit of a brokey right now."

At this point, I still wasn't panicking.

I figured maybe it was expensive.

But fine.

I said:

"Don't worry. If it's a bit ridiculous, I'll sort it. You can just cover the Korean BBQ."

Because again, we're 3 blokes going to Korea.

Not hosting the G7.

Then I asked my assistant the obvious question:

"How much was it?"

She replied:

"32,000,000 KRW + 10% VAT per night."

Which is a deeply suspicious way to answer a price question.

Who even answers in Korean Won?

Someone with a guilty secret to hide.

So I asked:

"What's that in Australian dollars?"

She said:

"About $55,000 AUD per night."

And that's when my soul left my body.

Then came the follow-up message:

"And because it was last minute... there's no cancellation."

Which is honestly the point where my brain stopped producing coherent thoughts.

I said:

"What are the other options?"

And:

"Are you fucking insane?"

She replied:

"I assumed you guys knew the prices."

That line has been haunting me ever since.

Because 10 days earlier I'd taken Kiri-Maree to Tokyo and splurged on one of the nicest hotels we'd ever stayed in.

$10,000 a night.

Which already felt wildly indulgent.

Now suddenly I'm staring at a $55,000-per-night penthouse suite, for a boys trip where we would have been perfectly happy sleeping on couches and eating Korean BBQ.

3 middle-aged idiots somehow had a hospitality budget larger than a small wedding.

For about 2 hours, I genuinely thought:

"Well... this is how I die."

Thankfully, Amex looked at the transaction and immediately decided:

"Absolutely the fuck not."

They blocked it for suspected fraud.

Which, to be fair, was the smartest judgment call anyone had made all day.

But the more I thought about this whole thing, the more unsettling it became.

Because Claude wasn't actually the problem.

Claude gave us 6 thoughtful options.

Different price points.

Fallback plans.

Context.

Tradeoffs.

The human removed the judgment layer.

I think this is one of the biggest business shifts of the AI era.

For years, most businesses hired people primarily for execution.

Do the task.

Complete the thing.

Move fast.

But execution is becoming cheap.

AI can already:

- research
- summarize
- structure
- synthesise
- draft
- organise

What's becoming valuable now is judgment.

Context.

Discernment.

The ability to stop and ask:

"Hang on... does this actually make sense?"

And I think a lot of small businesses accidentally trained their teams NOT to think.

We rewarded:

- speed
- responsiveness
- task completion
- "just get it done"

Until eventually some people became forwarding mechanisms.

Which is confronting.

BECAUSE WHEN EXECUTION GETS CHEAP, BAD JUDGMENT GETS VERY EXPENSIVE.

Anyway.

We ended up spending about $6k total for 4 nights.

Korean BBQ was excellent.

Kiri-Maree did not leave me.

And Amex fraud detection won Employee Of The Month.

A 2-screen company?

EST. DATE	2024-25 (Low confidence) Team-redesign era (before the 36 → 8 cuts were finished).
EMAIL FORMAT	<input checked="" type="button" value="Confession"/> Update
TOPICS	Team size Artist vs mechanic
BIG IDEA	Simplify to multiply. Build the company around the artist, not the mechanic's model.
PROOF & ASSETS	The '2-screen Zoom' moment; 16 fewer people; list of changes.

YOUTUBE POTENTIAL

VIDEO FORMAT	Talking-head story; screen-recording of a 2-screen Zoom as the cold open
WORKING TITLE	How Did We Become a 2-Screen Company?
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"I jumped on our all-hands and felt sick. We had spilled onto a second screen."

I jumped on zoom for our monthly all-hands with the team. (Where we connect, share wins, announce updates and celebrate client results).

I was excited to see everyone, until I jumped on the call and saw it.

You know how on zoom, everyone appears in those little Brady-bunch boxes, filling up the screen?

And when you have more people, they spill over onto a second screen?

Well our team had gotten so big we were on 2 screens.

And I just stood there, looking at all these faces, wondering how the hell did we become a 2 screen company?

What the hell do you all do?

I felt sick in my stomach.

There's nothing wrong with a big team.

There's a right team size for you.

And a right team size for me. And 2 screens wasn't it.

I'd been tolerating a lot. You know the little things that you put up with or ignore coz they're 'not that big a deal', until they all add up.

I'm an artist. But I wasn't spending my time creating. I was spending it in meetings, and dealing with dumb conflicts in the team.

I felt like I was putting out fires all the time, and we were playing defence.

I'd had enough, so we redesigned the company to suit my artist needs.

You've gotta simplify to multiply, so I made a list of the tolerations.

Things I didn't want. And things I did.

And we started making changes.

We changed team and roles (less and better) to increase the talent density.

We changed the kind of clients we work with in Boardroom (Wilburys only), and built the kind of community I want to be part of.

We changed our meeting cadence (Less repeat meetings. More async. And more jams on specific projects).

And most of all, we changed my role (Less backstage, more frontstage), to maximise my mojo and value to our clients and the market.

I stopped doing a ton of LMS (Lesser Mortal Shit), and started writing, creating, and sharing more.

Today there are 16 less people on the monthly zoom, and I've got my mojo back.

The team is way better, business is simpler. Revenue is up, and profit is way up.

And it's fun again.

That's what I want for you.

IT'S YOUR BUSINESS, AND YOU CAN MAKE IT FIT YOU LIKE A GLOVE. AS YOUR BUSINESS GROWS, YOUR LIFE SHOULD GET BETTER.

I feel like most of the business advice we get is from mechanics, teaching systems for mechanics.

That's great if you're a business mechanic.

But I'm an artist, and the mechanic models always felt off.

If you're a weirdo. A business artist, and the traditional model has you wondering how you got here.

I want you to know there's another way.

You can run an incredible business, make great money. Work on projects that excite you, with people you love, have a business that fits you like a glove.

I'm not perfect, but I felt so stuck, and now I feel so free.

TAKI 'I-SCREEN WEIRDO' MOORE

PART 7

Time

The calendar, defended.

39 Spanx your calendar

40 1 week a month, Toni becomes insane

41 There's a chair in your face

42 The mornings are for thinking

43 Your 3 magics

44 How to be so productive it feels illegal

45 100 is plenty.

Spanx your calendar

EST. DATE

Undated (— confidence)
Evergreen tutorial.

EMAIL FORMAT

Framework / how-to

TOPICS

CalendarTime

BIG IDEA

Compress your calendar horizontally (days) and vertically (hours). Work against the clock.

PROOF & ASSETS

Kraft before/after calendar grids; Taki works Tue–Fri, 8am–midday.

YOUTUBE POTENTIAL

.....

VIDEO FORMAT

Tutorial / whiteboard walkthrough; very searchable

WORKING TITLE

Spanx Your Calendar: How I Work 16 Hours a Week

COLD-OPEN HOOK

"Sara Blakely made a billion dollars hiding ugly fat. Do the same to your calendar."

Sara Blakely made a billion dollars hiding ugly fat.

Her business is called Spanx, the compression pants that suck in your wobbly bits so you look more toned.

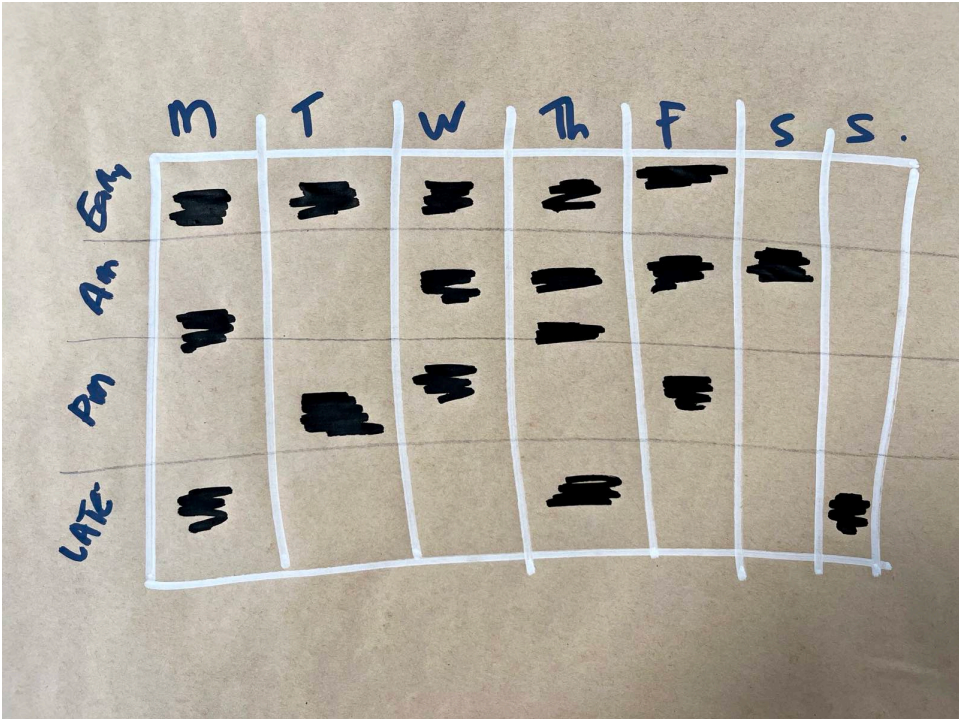

Spanx is also the best way I know to run your calendar and double your fun and profit.

Most people’s calendars are a mishmash of other people’s demands, errands, coaching calls and frantic last-minute content creation.

Mixed in with hours of not knowing what you’re doing, watching YouTube or being jealous of other people while doom scrolling on your phone.

Just like Boyle’s law for the expansion of gasses (where a gas expands to fill the space available to it), work expands to fill the space available to it too.

Most people’s calendars look like a jumbled mess.

Out of control, and it shows.

But not you. And not me.

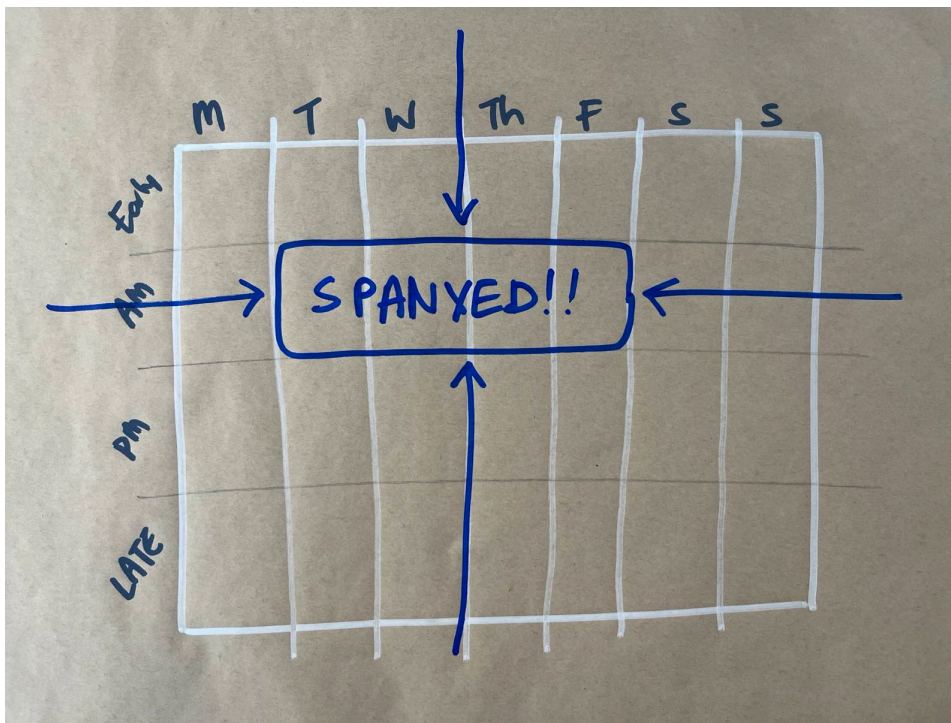

Results don't come from work expanding.

THEY COME FROM COMPRESSING THE AVAILABLE TIME.

We Spanx our calendar.

Here's how:

1. Get a week view of your calendar. 7 days across.
2. Spanx it horizontally: Decide which days you're ON, and which days you're OFF. Like Luke Skywalker, Princess Leia and Han Solo in Star Wars, compress the sides in so there's days you're on, and days you're off.
3. Then, Spanx it vertically. Decide when you start work, and when you stop work, down tools and partaay.

My work week is Tuesday-Friday, from 8am-midday. Yours will be whatever you want it to be.

You've shrunk the space available, and you'll work against the clock.

100% productive when you're ON.

And 100% free when you're OFF.

Spanx your calendar, and notice how focused and 'On' you feel.

TAKI 'SPANX' MOORE

P.S. You probably won't be able to run this spanxed calendar this week. It's probably pre-booked and busy. Next week, too. So block off your spanxed calendar from the week after next.

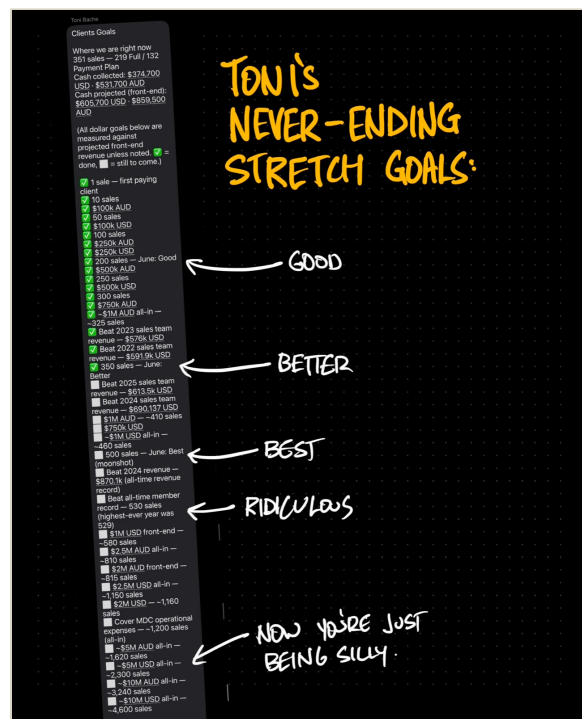

1 week a month, Toni becomes insane

EST. DATE	~Jun 2026 (Medium confidence)
	Toni's screenshot is a June campaign with targets vs '2025 sales team revenue' (so 2025 had finished).
EMAIL FORMAT	Team story Philosophy
TOPICS	Goals Campaigns Motivation
BIG IDEA	Play two games: a compass you can follow forever, and a clock (a monthly campaign) that makes you move.
PROOF & ASSETS	Screenshot of Toni's escalating goal list ('Now you're just being silly').
YOUTUBE POTENTIAL
VIDEO FORMAT	Story + concept; feature Toni on camera
WORKING TITLE	The Compass and the Clock
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"One week a month, Toni becomes insane."

One week a month, Toni becomes insane.

The rest of the month she's lovely. Calm. Reasonable. A functioning member of society.

Then campaign week starts, and she becomes unhinged.

Toni sets a goal. And the moment we hit it, she immediately announces the next one. Then the next. Then the next.

They're never random. They're always tied to some weird milestone that kinda makes sense.

Beat the all-time member record: 529.

Beat 2023 sales team revenue.

Cover the MDC operating expenses.

At first, I thought it was because Toni is competitive.

She is. (Very).

But the more I watched it, the more I realised the goals aren't the point.

The chase is.

Because the game isn't over until the clock strikes zero.

I'm not that competitive, but I really love hearing Toni's evil mastermind laugh when we hit a big target, only to replace it with something even more outlandish.

But that's only one of the games we're playing.

In our business, we play two:

The compass.

And the clock.

My compass is simple.

Work on projects that excite me.

With people I love.

To help the good guys win.

That's a game I could play forever.

That's the compass.

The clock is this month's campaign.

Every month we play a game that lasts exactly one week. There's a scoreboard, a countdown clock, a target, a hunt, a chase.

Then the game ends.

A compass and a clock.

Most people only play one game.

Some people are all clock. Frenzied. Deadlines. Goals. Hustle.

Always chasing. Never arriving.

Other people are all compass. Vision. Purpose. Meaning. Building something that matters.

But they never feel the rush of winning, because the payoff is years away.

One lot ends up exhausted.

The other lot never seems to get anywhere.

The magic is having both.

Find a game you can play forever.

Then create smaller games inside it to give you something to chase.

YOU NEED A COMPASS SO YOU KNOW WHERE YOU'RE GOING.

AND A CLOCK SO YOU ACTUALLY MOVE.

There's a chair in your face

EST. DATE

Undated (— confidence)
Evergreen.

EMAIL FORMAT

Metaphor

TOPICS

FocusOverwhelm

BIG IDEA

You're a lion frozen by too many chair legs. Remove the chair.

PROOF & ASSETS

Annotated B&W lion-tamer photo.

YOUTUBE POTENTIAL

VIDEO FORMAT

Short (story metaphor, strong visual)

WORKING TITLE

Why You're Frozen (The Lion Tamer's Chair)

COLD-OPEN HOOK

"Most lion tamers died young. Clyde Beatty didn't. He brought a chair."

Most lion tamers died young, mauled to death in front of horrified crowds.

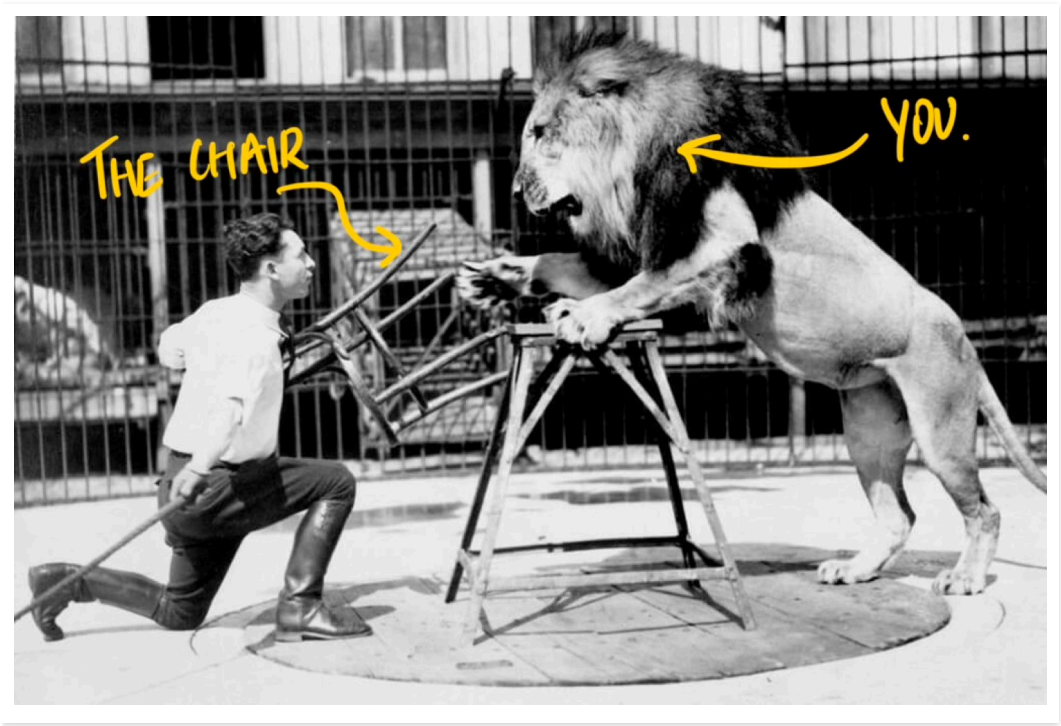

Mothers would gasp and shield their innocent children's eyes while the screaming turned to a wet, ragged gargle.

Clyde Beatty was the exception.

When he finally died at 62, it was the cancer that got him, not the claws.

How did he survive where so many perished?

He was one of the first lion tamers to bring a whip and a chair into the ring.

The whip was just theatre.

It was the chair that kept him alive.

He'd point it, legs-first, straight at the snarling lion.

And it would freeze.

Not from fear. (t'was but a chair)

But from confusion.

The lion didn't know which of the four legs to look at.

Its brain got overwhelmed & short-circuited.

Paralysed from indecision.

From ferocious & potent to frozen & powerless.

All because it didn't know where to focus.

(YOU MIGHT HAVE FIGURED OUT THAT THIS IS A METAPHOR 😊)

You're the lion. Full of power and potential.

But you're stuck in a circus, overworked, underpaid and under appreciated.

Confused by all the:

17 strategies you should be running

Conflicting expert opinions

Half-finished courses

And your own knee-jerk, brain-fart reactions

YOU'RE FROZEN BECAUSE YOU'VE GOT TOO MANY CHAIR LEGS IN YOUR FACE.

There's nothing wrong with you.

We've just gotta get rid of that damned chair.

TAKI 'FURNITURE REMOVALIST' MOORE

The mornings are for thinking

EST. DATE	Undated (— confidence) Post-COVID; evergreen.
EMAIL FORMAT	Philosophy How we run it
TOPICS	Day design Events
BIG IDEA	Mornings are for thinking, afternoons for working and hanging out. Half days double profit and triple fun.
PROOF & ASSETS	Philippe Starck voicemail; half-day event format.
YOUTUBE POTENTIAL ●●●●●
VIDEO FORMAT	Short, or a segment inside a time/calendar video
WORKING TITLE	The Calendar Mullet: Business in the Morning, Party in the Afternoon
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"Call Philippe Starck's office in the morning and you get this voicemail..."

My favourite designer is an eccentric Frenchman named Philippe Starck.

He's designed so many beautiful things: Steve Jobs' superyacht, designer hotels and a $135 thing you squeeze oranges on.

But that's not why I love him.

If you call his office in the morning, you get a voicemail message in English with a strong French accent:

"Here at Starck, the mornings are for thinking, and the afternoons for working.

We're thinking right now, so leave a message and we'll call you back in the afternoon."

I think that's the perfect workday. Cut in half. A morning for deep work, and an afternoon for fun and conversation.

Think about it: 2 or 3 good 50-minutes of focus makes an extraordinary day.

Everything after that is busy work and diminishing returns.

So I RUN MY DAYS LIKE A CALENDAR MULLET: BUSINESS IN THE MORNING, PARTY IN THE AFTERNOON.

It's also how we run our events.

We figured during covid that 1/2 a day on zoom was plenty. Also made it easy for people from different timezones to make it work without being up at 3am.

But when we went back to in-person events, we kept the 1/2 day format. The mornings are for thinking, and the afternoons for hanging with great people.

Hanging by the beach. Surfing. Breaking bread. Coming up with evil schemes into the evening.

The afternoons are the real magic of the 1/2 day format. In the poolside chats and firepit masterminds.

You get the big unlocks in conversation with smart cats.

The mornings are for thinking, and the afternoons are for hanging out and making magic happen.

At a mastermind and in your workday: If you cut your days in half, you'll double your profit and triple your fun.

TAKI '1/2 DAY' MOORE

Your 3 magics

EST. DATE	~Feb 2024 (High confidence) Calendar screenshot is dated Wednesday, January 31, 2024.
EMAIL FORMAT	Framework
TOPICS	Strengths	Delegation	LMS
BIG IDEA	Build the business around your 3 magics. Dump, automate or delegate the Lesser Mortal Shit.
PROOF & ASSETS	Annotated calendar screenshot (Coach/Collab/Create); '1 hr of magic pays for 10 hrs of LMS'.
YOUTUBE POTENTIAL			●●●●●
VIDEO FORMAT	Framework + exercise; pairs with #4 for a 'strengths' playlist
WORKING TITLE	Find Your 3 Magics (and Dump the Lesser Mortal Sh*t)
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"There are 3 things that make time disappear for you. You're barely doing them."

There are 3 specific activities that when you do them:

- * time disappears (they're so fun and engaging you could do them forever)
- * people notice because you're a natural.
- * they grow your business, almost like magic.

People admire you for them, but they come so effortlessly to you that you don't see what a big deal it is.

Let's call them the 3 Magics.

These are the 3 things that will grow your business.

But there's also all the other stuff you have to do.

Scheduling posts, replying to emails. Meetings. Making slides or whatever.

Manual labour grunt work.

I call it LMS. Lesser Mortal Shit.

2 questions:

1. How much time did you spend in the last week doing your 3 magics?

Not enough.

And

2. How much time did you spend doing lesser mortal shit?

Too much?

I know, depressing.

Million dollar coaches aren't smarter or better than you. They just spend most of their working time doing their 3 magics, and ignore or hand off the LMS to someone else.

My 3 magics are jamming with clever people, creating and sharing the ideas.

Create, communicate, collaborate.

My weeks, and my days are full of those things.

So, we've covered the magics. What do you do with the LMS?

Dump it, Automate it, or give it to someone else.

"Easy for you to say. You're so rich and handsome!"

True, but I got rich and handsome by doing my 3 magics.

You will too.

Here's the secret: An hour of you in your magic will pay for someone else to do 10 hours of LMS.

They'll be way better at it too, and probably love the stuff you hate. People are weird like that.

The way to $1M isn't by doing more. It's to build a business around your 3 magics.

You were born with the 3 magics already installed. You just need a way to turn them into a way to get leads, convert clients and deliver results.

This is the way.

Forget your weakness. Find your freakness.

TAKI 'MAGIC' MOORE

How to be so productive it feels illegal

EST. DATE Undated (— confidence)

Evergreen.

EMAIL FORMAT Contrarian philosophy

TOPICS

Productivity

Analog tools

Maker vs manager

BIG IDEA

Efficient ≠ productive. Show me the PRODUCT of your activity. Analog tools set you free.

PROOF & ASSETS

Studio photo (kraft bench); 3% laptop / 97% analog; Swiss vs Italians.

YOUTUBE POTENTIAL

VIDEO FORMAT

Studio tour / 'how I work' video

WORKING TITLE

I Run an 8-Figure Business and Spend 3% of My Week on a Laptop

COLD-OPEN HOOK

"The Swiss gave us the cuckoo clock. The Italians gave us the Renaissance."

Every business coach is obsessed with being productive & efficient.

Perfect calendars. Color-coded Notion boards. Time-blocked days that look like you're playing calendar Tetris.

Cool story, bro, but none of that means you're actually making anything.

If you're a coach, there's a 95% chance you're a maker trapped in a manager's world.

YOU DON'T NEED A BETTER CALENDAR. YOU NEED A BETTER CANVAS.

I run an 8-figure business, but I only spend maybe 3% of my week on a laptop.

97% of my time is Analog.

Hatching evil schemes on brown paper across a hydraulic architect's desk from the 1950s.

I'm not efficient. I'm productive.

The Swiss are efficient. Everything is neat and orderly and runs on time.

But what have the Swiss ever made?

The cuckoo clock. It's precise and mildly useful, but mostly annoying.

(LIKE 90% OF THE PRODUCTIVITY ADVICE THEY TRY TO FEED US)

The Swiss were efficient, but the Italians gave us the Renaissance.

Not a stopwatch or time audit in sight.

They were makers, not managers.

Here's what most coaches get backwards:

You're a maker running on a manager's schedule.

So busy reacting to emails, DMs, and back-to-back calls that you never actually make anything.

You think your laptop gives you freedom.

But it's really a portable distraction device.

Every ping is someone else's agenda for your life.

All the magic happens off the screen.

You think digital tools make you productive.

But analog tools set you free.

Lockbox. Timer. Fat markers. Brown paper.

Big ideas need big spaces.

Real productivity isn't how neatly you plan your day or how efficient you are with your minutes.

It's what you ship by the end of it.

PRODUCT/ivity.

Show me the product of your activity.

TAKI 'CUCKOO' MOORE

100 is plenty.

EST. DATE	2025 (Low confidence) Boardroom capped at 100, ~$5M/yr.
EMAIL FORMAT	Manifesto (refrain)
TOPICS	Enough Capping supply Boardroom
BIG IDEA	Don't build the business you're supposed to want. Build the one you want.
PROOF & ASSETS	Boardroom: 100 cap, ~$5M/yr, 1 day a week.

YOUTUBE POTENTIAL

VIDEO FORMAT	Essay; the refrain structure suits a punchy edit
WORKING TITLE	Why I Capped My $5M Program at 100 Clients
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"I capped Boardroom at 100. Not because it couldn't grow."

I capped Boardroom at 100.

Not because it couldn't grow.

But because 100 gives me everything I want.

(AND THAT'S THE POINT.)

Most coaches want more clients.

More scale. More revenue.

Because that's what the gurus teach you to chase.

I've got places to go wide, and I love them.

But Boardroom is my deep.

This is the room I wanted to be in.

So I built it.

I know every client and their business.

100 is plenty.

We've got a WhatsApp community.

Each client has their own Batphone to me.

100 is plenty.

We meet 3x a year in person.

Weekly online.

Group size matters.

100 is plenty.

I don't teach much in Boardroom.

I coach & I curate.

I get 7 & 8-figure coaches to help each other grow faster, together.

100 is plenty.

I work a day a week, and Boardroom makes about $5M a year.

100 is plenty.

I love the work.

I love the people.

I love the vibe.

100 is plenty.

It's so easy to get sucked into someone else's dream.

When things get hard, the noise gets loud.

"The grass is greener."

"You're missing out."

"You should do it this way."

Bollocks.

Don't build the business you're supposed to want.

BUILD THE BUSINESS YOU WANT.

As my ENFP hero, Willy Wonka once said:

"Did you hear about the man who got everything he ever wanted?

He lived happily ever after."

TAKI "CHIEF WANTING OFFICER" MOORE

PART 8

Life

The point of it all.

46 The speed of freedom

47 Ethan's eyes

48 That's ok. We're rich.

49 Pianos and chemotherapy

The speed of freedom

EST. DATE	2024-25 (Low confidence) Clients at '$2M a month, gunning for 3' (earlier than #2's $3M/mo).
EMAIL FORMAT	Family storyPhilosophy
TOPICS	Design vs defaultLifestyle
BIG IDEA	Everyone's driving as fast as they can. Know what you want; 92km/h is the speed of freedom.
PROOF & ASSETS	1965 Series II Land Rover photo; drive with the girls.
YOUTUBE POTENTIAL
VIDEO FORMAT	Mini-doc / B-roll-heavy vlog (Land Rover footage)
WORKING TITLE	92km/h Is the Speed of Freedom
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"Cars passed us all day, tooting and giving us the thumbs up."

On Saturday afternoon, we drove to the mall in my 1965 Series II Land Rover.

My daughters, Aroha & Jacinta were in the back, with their friend Sian.

The sun is shining, and the wind is blowing in our hair.

The Marshall bluetooth speaker blasting an eclectic mix of pop hits, Motown and gangster rap.

(My playlist is like a wedding: Something old, something new, something borrowed, and something blues).

We're all singing at the top of our lungs, and laughing our heads off.

They got their ears pierced and their nails painted all fancy.

On the way back, We weren't going as fast as the others.

Hell, we're not even going the speed limit — but we were having the time of our lives.

Cars & motorbikes passed us all the way there and back, tooting and giving us thumbs ups because they can see we're having the best day ever.

My little truck is old.

We're doing 92km an hour on the flat, and uphill, a number so low that I'm embarrassed to even type it.

It's starts with a 6 🚗!

We hit 100 once — down a big hill, and we all cheered!

I turned to the kids in the back and said "these are the good old days".

Everyone in the industry is driving as fast as they can.

Why? Because everyone else is, and everyone is telling them to.

"Drive faster, scale more, push harder."

Sometimes that's the right advice...

AND SOMETIMES 92KM/H IS THE REAL SPEED OF FREEDOM.

The most important decision in this world is to build a business by DESIGN.

There's nothing as powerful as someone who knows what they want.

When you know what you actually want, you give up all the 'shoulds'.

Some of my favourite clients are scaling like you wouldn't believe. $2M a month, and gunning for 3.

Others are building something deliberately smaller. A million bucks a year. In 20 hours a week. Touring around Australia in a camper van.

Both are epic. You just need to know what you want.

One of the first things we do is decide what we want life to look like, and then design a business that delivers the perfect mix of money, meaning and freedom for their ideal life.

Don't be fooled into someone else's vision for your life.

Let the others drive like maniacs, or get stuck in traffic. It's your life — 92km/hr is the speed of freedom for me.

Find yours.

TAKI '92' MOORE

Ethan's eyes

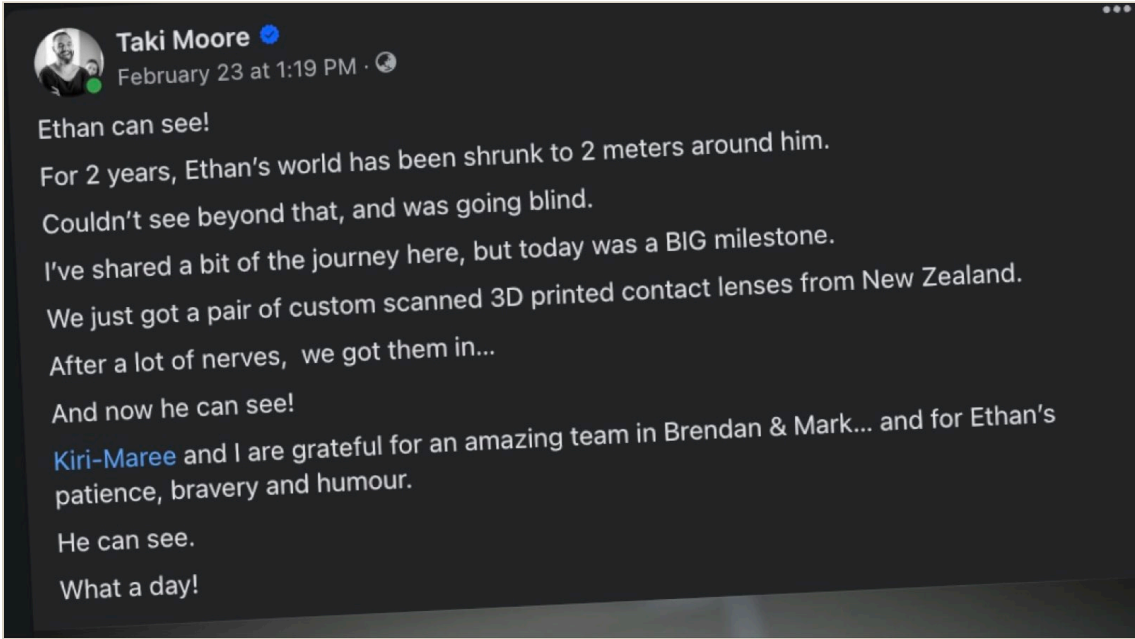

EST. DATE	~Mid-March (year unconfirmed) (Medium confidence) The Facebook post shown is dated 23 Feb, and the email says '3 weeks ago'. The screenshot has no year.
EMAIL FORMAT	Vulnerable personal story
TOPICS	Fear Resistance
BIG IDEA	The small self keeps us in a 2-metre world. You have to take the first step.
PROOF & ASSETS	Facebook 'Ethan can see!' post.

YOUTUBE POTENTIAL

●●●●●

VIDEO FORMAT	Only with Ethan's blessing; reflective piece
WORKING TITLE	(Only with family consent)
COLD-OPEN HOOK	"I spoke too soon, and it's crushing me."
HEADS-UP	Very personal. Get family consent first.

3 weeks ago, I proudly posted this on social:

“Ethan can see!

For 2 years, Ethan’s world has been shrunk to 2 meters around him.

Couldn’t see beyond that, and was going blind.

I’ve shared a bit of the journey here, but today was a BIG milestone.

We just got a pair of custom scanned 3D printed contact lenses from New Zealand.

After a lot of nerves, we got them in...

And now he can see!

Kiri-Maree and I are grateful for an amazing team in Brendan & Mark... and for Ethan’s patience, bravery and humour.

He can see.

What a day!”

It was the best day of our lives in the last 2 years.

But I spoke too soon, and it's crushing me.

... What I haven't shared is that we haven't been able to get the contact lenses in once since that day.

See, Ethan has crippling anxiety. Every time I get close to his eyes with the lenses, his instinct kicks in.

He freaks out. Dodges and weaves his head like a boxer to avoid the lens.

Then he says he can't do it, pushes up unto his feet... and runs away.

Every day for 3 weeks.

It hurts, knowing I can help, and not being able to help.

And it's terrible watching him get up the courage to do the thing — only to have his smaller self take over and keep him trapped in a tiny world where he can't see past 2 meters... because it's what he knows.

He know's it's just fear talking. He even asked if I could knock him out every morning and put them in when he was unconscious.

But it doesn't work like that.

WE'RE ALL LIVING IN A TINY WORLD, UNABLE TO SEE PAST OUR 2 METERS INTO WHAT'S POSSIBLE.

Every now and again we get close, and the small self 'protects' us and keeps us small.

Like a devious slithering snake, pretending to be on our side.

As a coach, it hurts knowing I can help someone, only to watch the resistance seduce them back into the safety of their limitations.

Like Ethan, sometimes I wish I could take over and make you believe.

But it doesn't work like that. It's your life, and you've gotta take the first step.

I'm testing a new approach with Ethan every day, and one day, we'll crack it and he'll be able to see again.

TAKI 'EYESIGHT' MOORE

That's ok. We're rich.

EST. DATE Undated (— confidence)

Evergreen anecdote.

EMAIL FORMAT

Anecdote

Philosophy

TOPICS

Money

Wealth mindset

BIG IDEA

Any problem money can solve isn't a problem. Don't do mindset voodoo. Make it true.

PROOF & ASSETS

Dean Jackson valet moment; Dan Sullivan + Mae West quotes.

YOUTUBE POTENTIAL

VIDEO FORMAT

Short

WORKING TITLE

'That's OK. We're Rich.'

COLD-OPEN HOOK

"The valet charged us $50. Dean Jackson just smiled."

Landed in Florida, and Dean Jackson picks me up.

We head to the Gaylord Hotel for lunch, and Dean valets the car.

We bump into Ron Sell, leader of a martial arts empire, before we walk to the restaurant, Moor.

It's meant to be great, but it's closed.

So we decide to take this show on the road, and get outta there.

When we get back to the valet, we explain the the restaurant was closed, and he looks worried.

"I'm sorry sir, but since you couldn't get your parking ticket validated, I'm gonna have to charge you $50."

Without thinking, Dean smiles and says 'That's ok. We're rich!'

Pays the $50, and we get outta there.

He wasn't douchey about it. He said it lighthearted. It was just facts.

DAN SULLIVAN TOLD ME ONCE "ANY PROBLEM THAT CAN BE SOLVED WITH MONEY YOU HAVE IS NOT A PROBLEM".

One of the main reasons to grow your coaching business is to make the hard things not hard anymore.

It's fun being in a world where the problems money can solve are solved.

(You'll still have all the problems that money can't solve — but with extra resources and time to tackle them too).

Say it out loud, and notice how you feel: "That's ok. I'm rich."

Do you feel weird? Boasty? Like you're lying?

Or calm and natural, as if you just said "The sky is up"?

We don't need to do any money mindset voodoo here. We just need to make it true.

The great American actress, Mae West, said it best: "I've been rich and I've been poor, and rich is better".

I want you to be rich.

TAKI "WE'RE RICH" MOORE

Pianos and chemotherapy

EST. DATE

Mid 2026 (Medium confidence)
Black Belt 'sold out 13 months in a row' (8 in #7, ~Feb 2026); Ethan's 26th.

EMAIL FORMAT

Personal update

Philosophy

TOPICS

Priorities

Focus

Let fires burn

BIG IDEA

You can't fix every fire. Let some burn. Fix one thing so well it stays fixed.

PROOF & ASSETS

Kiri-Maree's chemo; Sydney/Noosa split; the free piano from Carol.

YOUTUBE POTENTIAL

VIDEO FORMAT

Reflective vlog. Very personal, so check with family first.

WORKING TITLE

Let the Fires Burn

COLD-OPEN HOOK

"Every day this season I have to choose: good husband, or good dad?"

HEADS-UP

Very personal. Check with family before publishing.

Every day this season, I have to choose:

Am I going to be a good husband today, or a good dad?

Rough choice.

We landed back in Australia after the biggest and best Black Belt event ever.

The very next day was Ethan's 26th birthday...

And Kiri-Maree's first week of chemo.

She had major cancer surgery 2 months ago, and now she's got a round of chemo every 2 weeks for 16 weeks.

It's been rough, and she's been brave.

She's riding the waves, physically, mentally and emotionally.

Here's what makes it extra tricky: The surgery and the chemo are in Sydney.

Our 2 girls are in their final years of high school.

In Noosa.

I want to be in both places, but I can't.

So I have to choose.

Last week the right decision was Sydney. Kiri-Maree was in the hospital 4 days out of 5.

I was there, supporting as best I could.

Good husband. Okay dad.

The girls managed well, but I felt guilty about not giving them the time they deserved.

Kiri-Maree's next cycle is a week and a half away, so yesterday I flew back to Noosa with Ethan to be with the girls this week.

After school today, we drove out to Pomona to buy a 60-year-old secondhand piano off a softly spoken old widow called Carol.

Her son used to play it at the brewery where he worked.

Turns out, Carol didn't want money for it. She just wanted it to go to a good home.

The piano weighed a million kilos, and 92-year old Carol was no help at all 🤦.

So me and 2 teenage girls lugged it into the back of the ute, wrapped it moving blankets, tied it down with ratchet straps. Then drove home, slow and careful, with an old piano hanging out the back.

It's in the shed. They've already named the band.

Today we made memories.

Good dad. Okay husband.

You can't be everywhere and do everything.

It's the same in business.

There are always fires burning. They're all important. And they all need your energy and focus.

But you can't fix them all at once.

(I've tried. You never actually fix any of them.

You just get exhausted from all the running around.)

As my mate Tony Fraser-Jones says: sometimes you've just gotta let the fires burn.

Last year the most important thing was getting good at content, so we could stop chasing and start choosing.

It worked.

We've sold out 13 months in a row.

Now the eye of Sauron is on the program itself, making it even simpler and easier for our clients to win.

There will always be fires.

Stop running around trying to put them all out.

Let them burn. Fix one thing so well it stays fixed.

TAKI 'OKAY DAD AND HUSBAND' MOORE